Mr. MAX CLARK, attorney, Ridglea State Bank Building, furnished the following information:

His wife is "a white Russian" who was reared in France, and CLARK met her in France during World War II. Her family still resides in France. Mr. and Mrs. CLARK had become acquainted with practically all persons of Russian background in the Dallas-Fort Worth area.

CLARK advised he had known LYDIA DYMITRUK since she moved to Fort Worth during the fall of 1963. He had heard of her in Dallas prior to that time, but was not personally acquainted with her.

CLARK related that LYDIA DYMITRUK was born in Russia and that she later went to Belgium where she lived in Brussels for a number of years. She still has a sister who resides in Brussels, and DYMITRUK corresponds with this sister at regular intervals. Her mother still resides in Russia and she communicates with her mother through the sister in Brussels, Belgium. CLARK did not know the name or address of the sister or the mother.

DYMITRUK was previously married while she lived in Brussels, but he did not know this husband's name. She was later married to a man named PAUL DYMITRUK who has lived in Dallas for a number of years. CLARK was not personally acquainted with PAUL DYMITRUK.

LYDIA DYMITRUK resides in an apartment at 3542½ Kent Street. She goes with a boy friend named ALEX KLEINLERER, who resides in another apartment at the same address of 3542 Kent. KLEINLERER is a Frenchman and came to this country from France. He is employed by Lomo Industries, Inc., of Fort Worth, Texas.

CLARK advised that LYDIA DYMITRUK, in his opinion, is not too smart, is slow to catch on to things in this country, and that she had a great deal of trouble learning the English language. She speaks fairly good English at this time, but still has a decided accent and sometimes has trouble with the proper words. She has always talked about the United States in a very friendly manner. She likes it in this country and does not care to go back to Russia, or even to Belgium. CLARK had never heard her make any derogatory statements concerning the United States. She does not impress him as being the type who would be involved in politics or know much about the operation of any type of government.

CLARK and his wife have been fairly good friends with DYMITRUK and KLEINLERER for the past six or eight months.
