Dear Allan,

Bill RITE

Sorry I'm late sending this. The book was late getting here from the printer and its arrival coincided with intense work on the Ray case. (There may be a decision soon. Should be.)

Not until I went over the list I kept last night did I realize I hadn't sent you a copy. I must have confused sending a copy and writing a letter, which I know I did, in advance.

I think you will find this a real shocker, in many ways.

If you mention it without calling me, please tell both your listeners and the switchboard operators my address and the price, $6.25 by mail. I'm still broke, still a one-man publisher, and every needless letter I write is at the cost of other work. One station forgot and before long there operators were complaining!

My colleague in this book borrowed the money to pay the printer. Had he not I'd probably still be plodding through the unreceptive publishers in NYC. After three of them this time Jim decided it should be privately printed again.

Meanwhile, every day the interest accumulates.

One of my suits, that for the spectrographic analysis, was cited as a need for amending the Freedom of Information law. If you get the Congressional record, you'll find it was May 30. I'm sure you remember the veto and the override.

Hope to hear from you.

And that you have a fine holiday and a much better year than seems in prospect for any of us!

Sincerely,
