Dear Harold:

Appropos of our telephone conversation of today concerning a lead article by Postmaster General Walker. One thing the article should not cover is how many postmen and post offices there are in the United States. I think we should give people something different--something they don't know--something more exciting, such as what the post office is doing in counter-espionage, work on letters, etc.

I hope to hell that you can come through on this lead and that you'll succeed also on the health and army stories.

If Walker flops, see what you can do about getting some other government official who can write something for us with a provocative title. If worse comes to worse, maybe we can get a Senator.

Regards,

Sincerely,

Al Whyman
