Darling- The thousands of miles that separate us cannot make me forget that day which all husbands traditionally, today, our wedding & my happiest anniversary. You may have had a cable from me today. That, I'm afraid, is the best present I can muster under the circumstances. I am quite well & happy, save for a tough break I got yesterday. After I last saw you I got the information that Colbie, Lloyd & Alice Disbrow were all in or near a certain place which I cannot reveal. I began hoping terribly hard I'd get sent there, I was. But after very diligent search & inquiry, with the aid of the Red Cross, I learned that now none are here. I had accumulated quite a package for Colbie, cigars, candy, cigarettes, tobacco, gum, etc. & I finally sent it by the Red Cross. The boys all send you good wishes on our anniversary, and I
