Judge Bars 6 From College

Baton Rouge, La.

A judge ordered six students permanently barred from Southern University's Baton Rouge campus yesterday on grounds they had contributed to campus unrest and likely would again if they have the chance.

State District Judge Lewis S. Doherty issued the order shortly after it was announced in a related development that the East Baton Rouge grand jury will investigate last fall's violence in which two students died at the campus.

Doherty's ruling allowed three other students, also accused of being trouble makers, to return to campus.

University President G. Leon Netterville had asked that the nine be barred. He said they were instigators of the disruptions which climaxed in the shooting November 16.

Doherty ruled that it had not been proved that Willie Henderson and Donald Mills were leaders of the disruptions and he said another defendant, Louis Anthony, had shown a willingness to return peacefully to school.

As for the remaining six, Doherty said the evidence showed they led disruptions which effectively shut down educational processes. He also said they showed "resolve and determination to pursue the same activities as . . . before."

Doherty said the students were right in contending that the school denied them due process by expelling them without a hearing. But he said this was not the primary issue before the ciurt.

The six students are Frederick Prejean, Charlene Hardnett, Ricky Hill, Nathaniel Howard, Herget Harris, and Paul Hivers.

District Attorney Ossie Brown said his grand jury has asked him and state Attorney General William Guste to present evidence relating to the shooting. The grand jury reconvenes February 20.
