Wiretapping

BONN—The West German Cabinet approved an amendment to the constitution that would turn over to German security services the right of the Western Allies to tap telephone calls and open private mail.

The Allies had used the measures to protect the security of their troops. A German official said the Allies will be consulted on the amendment after it's given a second reading in Parliament.