

Copy Paper Post Programme in 1958 - you never forget!

THE NEW YORK TIMES, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY

Man Who Says He Once Served C.I.A. Asserts Post

EVERETT R. HOLLES

Special to The New York Times

AN DIEGO, Jan. 7—A man

official of the Central Intelligence Agency said today that when he resigned in 1959 Post Office Department was secretly assisting the C.I.A. in accepting and copying the mail of American citizens.

Dr. Melvin Crain, 53 years old, a professor of political science at San Diego State University, said C.I.A. officials involved in the "mail tapping" were not aware that it was an illegal and unconstitutional invasion of privacy and violation of the National Security Act of 1947, which created the intelligence agency.

He said his colleagues justified the operation, however, as being necessary to "achieve our mission" of safeguarding America in security against the Soviet Union.

A spokesman for the Postal Service in Washington, Jameson, denied that the service was ever or is now "involved in opening the private mail of American citizens. First-class mail will be opened only by court order, usually in criminal cases, and this occurs only on rare occasions," he said.

The Summer of 1958

The only exceptions are open-sealed mail to search for addresses for delivery or if the return is specifically approved by the addressee.

Federal law on "obstruction of correspondence" set a maximum penalty of $2,000 in fines and five years in prison for anyone who takes any letter or puts it into the business or security of another, or opens it "in the name" of another.

Dr. Melvin Crain

A spokesman for the Postal Service in Washington, Jameson, denied that the service was ever or is now "involved in opening the private mail of American citizens. First-class mail will be opened only by court order, usually in criminal cases, and this occurs only on rare occasions," he said.

The Summer of 1958

The only exceptions are open-sealed mail to search for addresses for delivery or if the return is specifically approved by the addressee.

Federal law on "obstruction of correspondence" set a maximum penalty of $2,000 in fines and five years in prison for anyone who takes any letter or puts it into the business or security of another, or opens it "in the name" of another.

arrangement among the C.I.A., the Post Office Department and the Federal Bureau of Investigation. A C.I.A. spokesman in Washington declined to comment on whether Dr. Crain had ever worked for the agency or on whether such mail opening was carried out. The spokesman said that the C.I.A. was "not very forthcoming" about naming employees or former employees and pointed out that the matter of possible domestic operators was under review by a commission appointed by President Ford. Dr. Crain, who joined the C.I.A. in September, 1951, said the agency gave him a "staff security clearance—a super-sensitive D" clearance—a super-sensitive security clearance—in November, 1958, that made him aware of the highly secret mail intercepts. Thereafter, he said his office read about six intercepted letters from Americans each day.

Letter From a Student

The equipment used in the New York and New Orleans post offices, according to Dr. Crain, enabled the C.I.A. to open copy, resal letters and send them on their way without any telltale signs of tampering. A similar mail surveillance unit was operated by the Washington headquarters of the F.B.I., he added.

Most of the letters were in English, to friends and relatives in the Soviet Union. Dr. Crain said, and he could recall no instances where "positive use" was gained in the intercepted mail. One purpose of the surveillance, he said, was to develop contacts with Americans who had acquaintances in Russia. "This was often a method for recruiting C.I.A. operatives," he said. He said he kept one of the intercepted letters, written on Nov. 16, 1958, by an Amherst College student, apparently connected with the school newspaper, mailed the following day from Amherst, Mass., and opened and copied on Nov. 19 before being forwarded on to Moscow. The letter, he said, sought to arrange for a shipment of 1,000 copies of the college newspaper to the Moscow Committee of Youth Organizations.

"We were in effect, building dossiers on these people," the former C.I.A. employee said. He said an official at a "Staff D" briefing he boasted that letters could be opened, copied and sent on to their destination so quickly that "the normal flow of the mail was not disturbed" at the New York and New Orleans post offices. Dr. Crain said he had carried his complaint to his superior, Richard M. Bissell Jr., deputy director of the C.I.A.'s office of plans, "who said he was surprised and shocked and would take steps to end the mail surveillance, but nothing happened."

Routine Inspections

In describing how he first learned of the alleged covert mail inspections in November, 1958, Dr. Crain said: "I discovered some people in my department had information that could not be accounted for. It had no apparent source. One of the most important things in intelligence gathering is that all information be documented."

"When I questioned their sources they [the people supplying the information] decided I should be given Staff D clearance before they told me." After obtaining the new clearance he was told, he said, that the C.I.A. with the help of the Post Office Department and the F.B.I. was routinely inspecting the mail of Americans in the Soviet Union.

into this area.

8, 1975

Office Helped Agency Open Mail

"Even though most of the writers were merely corresponding with relatives, you have to remember that this was during the early days of the cold war and anyone who wrote letters to the Soviet Union was immediately suspect.

"Officials of the C.I.A. told me they knew it was illegal and unconstitutional but it was needed to achieve our mission. They told me the Post Office and the F.B.I. were involved. They also told me the mail was being opened at two different post offices, one in New York and the other in New Orleans.

"I tried to stop this operation from within the agency, then from the outside, but I was extremely limited. It was illegal for me to discuss the situation with anyone who wasn't properly cleared. You were in big trouble if you violated the code. The threat was held over us always."

Dr. Crain said that his disenchantment with the tactics of the C.I.A. began several years earlier.

"I had heard and seen other things which made me question the agency," he said. "You might rationalize the things we did outside the country as trying to overthrow the Communists, but not the invasion of the privacy of Americans."

Asked why he had not resigned earlier, Dr. Crain said:

"I felt intimidated because of the McCarthyism, his witch hunts and the hysteria that was going on in this country at the time. We were made to believe that the United States was being ringed by the Soviet Union and penetrated by subversives."

Dr. Crain said that for years he has been telling his students in five political science classes he teaches at San Diego State that the C.I.A. has been illegally spying on American citizens "but nobody was ever really interested until now."

Wilkes-Barre Strike Ends
WILKES-BARRE, Pa., Jan. 7 (AP) — Publication of The Wilkes-Barre Time-Leader, Evening News, Record has resumed after an eight-week strike by members of the Newspaper Guild. Carl Romanelli, a member of Guild Local 120, said that the newspaper had been published yesterday under terms of a contract negotiated with the Wilkes-Barre Publishing Company raising the minimum starting salary for reporters with five years' experience from $270 to $331 a week.