

The CIA and the Foundations

Research Organization Lists Agency's Dummies and Conduits

From a Report by Congressional Quarterly

A series of disclosures during the week of Feb. 19-24 linked a number of organizations in the fields of law, journalism, labor, education and religion to the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA). The disclosures had begun Feb. 13 when the National Student Association (NSA) announced it had been receiving funds from the CIA since 1952.

Press reports have identified a total of 46 foundations believed to have been links between the CIA and organizations receiving CIA funds. These foundations generally fell into three categories. (1) CIA "dummy" foundations set up by the CIA to give CIA funds directly to certain organizations or to channel CIA funds to established foundations which then served as conduits by giving the money to CIA-designated organizations; (2) suspected CIA "dummies" which, if they were not "dummies," were co-operating with the CIA in some capacity, and (3) established foundations serving as conduits for CIA money channeled to them, usually through "dummy" foundations. The CIA has refused to say which foundations it worked with or to disclose in what capacity any of the foundations identified by press reports may have been serving. It is possible, therefore, that some of the foundations listed below may be in the wrong category. Background information on the foundations was obtained from the Foundation Directory (Edition 2) and from the files of the Foundation Library Center, Washington, D.C. In some instances, no information was available.
