QUOTESVILLE: Comedian Woody Allen, whose ex-wife is suing him for "degrading" her in his routines, would seem to be madly unafraid. In his opening show at the hungry i Monday night, he began: "I read that some guy grabbed her and violated her. That's what the papers said — violated. And if I know my ex-wife, it was a non-moving violation. I should have known there was something fishy about our marriage from the start. My parents approved of her. But my dog died" . . . . . On the hippie scene: "I went to this party in the Haight-Ashbury, and a girl fed a sugar cube to a cop's horse. The horse was later arrested at a sit-in in Mississippi." On his own writing career: "I'm working on a non-fiction version of the Warren Report." On speed reading: "I took a course in it, learning to read straight down the middle of the page, and was able to go through 'War and Peace' in 20 minutes. It's about Russia." About Woody: He's about the best there is these days and nights . . . . . Historic note: He first appeared at the hungry i four years ago, to open a show that featured another then-unknown, Barbra Streisand. I gather she is doing all right, too.
