Dear Mary,

I've been negligent lately, but not on purpose. Last night I found the letter I'd forgotten to mail, in a pile of trash to answer.

I've been busy with things other than the usual work recently. The rains have taken some time, I've had a medical thing to take care of and, with a break in the weather, I've been doing some men/householder work outside. My body, which is aging too rapidly, needs this kind of work. And I've something to show for it. We inherited a cupboard with warped doors. A carpenter has been surprised to correct this for two years. I've started to, with a simple solution that looks like it will work, beginning with a try at the junk yard for some extra 6-hand eagle iron. When I'm finished, I believe the doors will work, that Bill will have enough to her gardening tools and I'll probably have built her stalick cabinets for pots and small hand tools, etc. Between the eagle irons, from the scrap wood that, like a countrymen, I do save. And I am a countryman. I slept late this a.m., until almost six. I found "our" wild mallards waiting for me to feed them. They came up to the kitchen door now when they saw me. I've made a pot of coffee and have started to write this, and I have to stop because the wild geese are here looking for their food, about 20 minutes early.

When I saw Bill several days ago he had made an extra copy of a letter I gave him to copy. The single letter in the correspondence can be no more than a souvenir to you, but here is a souvenir. It is one of the series of letters I'll use in the next suit that I'll be filing soon, on the panel-report(s) materials. This time I'll have to be my own lawyer, with counsel from Bill on the revers, etc.

It had been beyond my capacity to make copies of everything for everybody and in some areas I've had to stop it for other reasons (this does not relate to you) simply because there was been so much bickering and timidity, both of which are plentiful. If I went to tell the raccoons of the government what I know I can write and tell them, I do not, let them learn the way it will help us. This letter, for example, says they have none of the raw materials of the panels. That is false. I have, in writing, who gave what to whom. And under the law they have to give it to me. I regret this new crew is even more contemptuous of the law. And this main pain contracted the "mass syndrome", the one I call "Burn Baby Burn". I've got that in writing, too. So, I've given you a little glimmer, for there is time for no more. I'm writing this before I speak till which I'll do soon. However, please say nothing about it. Gary and Mulars were or less informed. Aside from the official corruption, which I can expect to extend to the courts, the major problem I encircle with the panel suit is cost. I anticipate calling the doctors as witnesses. I don't know, when the time comes, where their transportation expenses will come from. But can you imagine how I look forward to questioning them? Now that you've read the two PMs you know some of what I know. My work in this area has gone much further than I indicate in correspondence, which is a new kind of public notice too often. I've been typing sources other than the archives, with some degree of success. In time, you'll have it and if you are here before then, you'll see it. Kind blowing stuff, believe me.

I started to apologize. Now I've other things to do. I make a speech to a black group to commemorate King's assassination in DC today (and I'm telling them they've abdicated, that they have surrendered the most elemental traits of manhood). I think I'll go to the P.C. first so my soul won't stand a dot in the box. And I've got to wake Bill so she can see me (otherwise I'd eat too much) and I've got to feed the birds. But I do hope things are picking up with your boy. The trip to California may well have been better than medicine. Best to all,
