The complaint listed nine incidents of surveillance, including: following Resistance workers from their homes to the office for days at a time, stopping them on the street and questioning them about political activities and trying to persuade them that they ing the sult, Jim Hart, Anne did not need to have a lawyer Flitcraft and Francis Femia, present, taking pictures and present, taking pictures and keeping the Resistance office and the Resistance commune under daily surveillance.

The complaint also said that during a warranted search of the apartment of Miss Flit-craft, a worker for the AFSC, FBI agents physically threatened her and her attorney, David Kairys, when they asserted her rights. "Plaintiff Flitcraft was further har-rassed when agents read her personal letters in the apartment and attempted to humiliated her by passing them around," plaintiff Jim B. Hart, in his 20s, was assaulted by an FBI agent who "grabbed him around the neck and arrested him without probable cause." No criminal charges were placed against Hart and he was not informed of his rights during two hours of questioning on his political and social beliefs and associations, the complaint said.

The complaint charged

The complaint said David Nirenberg, a Resistance worker, who is on probation, and Francis Femia, an AFSC worker, who is on parole for destroying draft records and refusing induction, were threatened with the loss of their probation and parole and that Nirenberg was told that his phone was tapped.

The suit asked an injunction restraining the FBI from harassment and seeks a total of $270,000 damages.
