Dear David,

Thanks very much for the JFK assassination issue of that strange manifestation of "youth culture", FILTH.

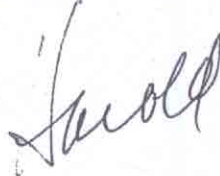

If you ever hear of anyone interested in Pelley, what I got back from the FBI, to which I gave all I had, I gave to Dave Wrone, Univ. Wisc, Stevens Point, WI 54481.

If I did not tell you, I gave you catalogue to local <sup>H</sup>ood ~~State~~ College/

Did you get a notice from the publisher of the appearance of Selections from Whitewash? I've not heard of it being announced. Out last month.

Carroll & Graf/Richard Gallen.

Thanks and best wishes,

Mafia and the CIA? What a silly question, since the galaxy of public and private inquiry will never prove anything. Instead, Oswald's image has become a symbol of a perceived collective helplessness. Conspiracy theories are the articulation of this. They are the new urban legends, giving a voice to the modern boogey men that plague the information age.

The range of these tales goes from the more prosaic to the comically cosmic. What is the Trilateral Commission? Is the US government the world's largest dope ring? Are there prison colonies on Mars?

If we are to believe that some conspiracies are real, and some must be, then it must be understood that it takes some degree of economic influence, as well as access to communication, for certain figures or groups to intentionally and consciously alter history. Here is a conspiracy for your consideration. By far the most insidious crime committed by the Ruling Elite is the Conspiracy of Stupidity: secret activities designed to produce immediate gain regardless of the ultimate outcome. How else can anyone view current reliance on the private car, synthetic products and mass destruction of native habitats?

So why does Filth want to compile this list of conspiracies, coverups and covert operations that might just as well be called Operation Overkill? Because amazingly enough we find this stuff interesting and subscribe to the attitude that knowledge is better than ignorance. We are aware that our playful inclusion of the more "speculative" conspiracyfrants could possibly lead many to brand us flakes, lumping treasured theories with utter crackpottery. It's of course understood that much listed herein cannot be verified. There's also much that couldn't be included due to space and time limitations.

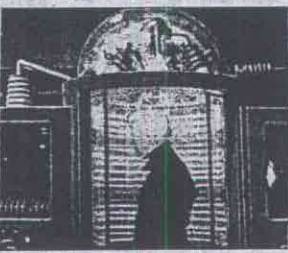

So take what you read with a grain of salt, and realize wisdom comes with awareness.

1. THE REAL DARREN STEVENS

Who came first, the chicken or the egg? Dickologists suggest the "One Dick Theory": Darren being the same person, covering up extensive scalp surgery, and one nervous breakdown. Others have speculated the involvement of the Roman Catholic Church having a contract on the main male lead of a sitcom about Devil Worshiping. Still others have stated that Dick Sargeant was sacrificed to Satan by Endora. The truth came out when he was discovered living in Pensacola Fl. born again as a practicing Pentecostal Minister. (SMM WD)

2. MK ULTRA

Imagine this: You've been feeling a little depressed lately—dangerously so—and have decided that you should check into a mental institution for a little professional help for both your own and your family's sake. Next thing you know you're shaking hands with your doctor. He gives you a well practiced smile of reassurance, while telling you that "Everything will be fine. —with your cooperation." Within two weeks, you find yourself strapped to a table with drills boring into your skull. Sound horrific? Well, the preceding scenario was experienced by unsuspecting victims of the CIA's infamous Operation MK Ultra—an attempt by that tax supported agency to learn Manchurian Candidate style mind control, using psychiatric patients in a Canadian mental hospital called the Allan Memorial Institute, with the aid of one certified bastard and physician on payroll named Dr. Ewan Cameron. Using his position as founder and head neurosurgeon of the Institute, against a backdrop of Cold War paranoia and calculated, inhumane policies and projects with names like Operation Flesh Hunt, Project Castigate, Operation Midnight Climax, Project Chatter, MK

Delta, Operation Arrichoke, ad infinitum, Dr. Cameron subjected patients in his care to experiments akin to those performed by Nazi Doktors on Jews, mental patients, gypsies and homosexuals during World War II. A section of the Institute's basement was declared off limits to all staff except Dr. Cameron and his two assistants, Rubenstein and Zielinski.

There, patients were kept sleepless for days, or in a drugged stupor for indeterminate periods of time, forced to listen to endlessly repeating tapes of their own voices, recorded during the most sensitive and confessional moments of psychoanalysis, a process Dr. Cameron termed "psychic driving" and liked to describe as "beneficial brainwashing". Patients would regularly breakdown, sobbing and screaming, sometimes begging, for the tape to stop. Some patients were subjected to physical torture in hopes of breaking down and dominating their personalities, restructuring their egos in a process that shares much in common with taking a scalpel to someone's face, cutting away and reorganizing the pieces to give them the look you want. Electroshock "therapy" was liberally applied and lobotomies were performed on individuals who had checked in for nothing more than melancholy and depression. In a related project, nine black inmates at the Lexington, Kentucky Addiction Center were injected with psilocybin and then measured for their "psychological responses"—fear that they were going insane, a sense of impending evil, or imminent death.—The results were, at best, "inconclusive". Another related experiment was the spiking of drinks and food with LSD, which was then given to unknowing subjects who were kept under observation. As a result of one such incident, a distinguished biochemist name Dr. Frank Olsen suffered a deepening psychosis and paranoia, and committed suicide by hurling himself from a hotel window to the sidewalk below.

Medicine, Politics, and Terrorism... Always a good investment. For further information on this and related horrors, check out or steal Gordan Thomas' extremely thorough and entertaining account of MK ULTRA, "JOURNEY INTO MADNESS" (Bantam Books, 1989)—full of gruesome details, interviews with survivors, sleazy descriptions of the political underbelly of the Inner Intelligence circles, etc. etc. You'll never talk to a therapist again without noting the evil glint in their eyes. ### 3. EVERYTHING'S A CONSPIRACY

Want to confuse a bunch of paranoid hippies and indie boot-lickers? Have a group of dissidents watching your every move? Want to create a smoke screen as large as the smog bank in LA? If you answer yes to these three questions, chances are, you're the government. It's a really simple process, akin to a meta shell game. As the government, you create as many conspiracies as possible so that you can sneak the real wrong-doing under the noses of the distracted, or hopelessly off-track searchers and cover your back. So you throw a few choice bits forward, and leave some of your fellows hanging out to dry as a bone to keep the paranoids on the trail, what does it matter? You're robbing the bank while they're putting out a fire in the orphanage. And you can even use such a beautiful game plan on your own people just to keep them wondering who's at the top and what's really going on. And the best aspect of such a conspiracy shield is that it's self-perpetuating. Even the conspiracy devotees keep their "true knowledge" to themselves, lest harm befall them, and thus, create a conspiracy theorist conspiracy. After all, what more is a conspiracy than a secret, or secret intention, shared between a few individuals? So, the more theories, the more conspiracies until you have a perpetual conspiracy machine running in full gear chasing it's own tail and creating more energy than it can use. Why waste your time on who really killed JFK or some other bullshit, when in truth, even the assassins themselves probably don't know they did it.

As the writers and/or editors of Filth, we find it is our duty to shape the minds of our readership into whatever form we deem fit and correct. As a general principle, we wish to have you as spineless, covering dope fiends, with no sense of balance or reality. That suits us fine. However, we have deemed it appropriate that you feel fearful as well. So here it is, the Conspiracy issue of Filth. Be certain to watch your back as you read it and weep. Remember: We aren't the only one's watching you. (MF & RG)

4. SPATIAL DECONCENTRATION

In the wake of the 1967 Detroit riots, President Johnson called for an independent commission to study the "urban problem". The National Advisory Commission Report on Civil Disorders is more commonly known as the Kerner Commission. Among intelligence agencies contributing to the commission's findings were the Rand Corporation and the Brookings Institute, both CIA-affiliated think tanks. The study was not yet completed when Martin Luther King Jr.'s assassination touched off a massive wave of ghetto riots.

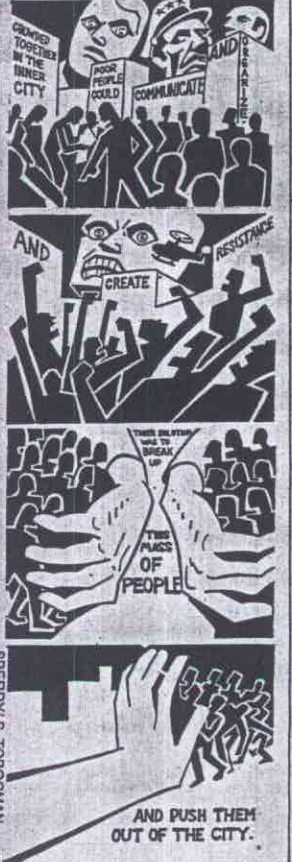

Guess what? The Kerner Commission concluded that poverty in America's inner cities was so entrenched that the ghettos could never be transformed back into viable neighborhoods. A program called "Spatial Deconcentration" defined what the commission saw as the only solution to the growing problem of public order: allow bad areas to get worse, induce minorities to move to the "township" suburbs, destroy and then renovate undesirable inner-cities for a "better class" of people.

By 1980, everybody had heard of gentrification. How many knew that it came about largely due to a Housing & Urban Development (HUD) plan called Regional Housing Mobility Program? This covert strategy of deconcentration flew directly in the face of HUD's overt "revitalization" projects.

Some elements of the African American community have for years argued that as a result of '67-'68 riots, the government declared a "secret war" on blacks in America. What we now know about The Kerner Commission, Spatial Deconcentration and HUD, makes this point difficult, if not impossible, to reject.

This is a summary of an article written primarily by Yolanda Ward, for a national housing activists' conference. A full length version appears in World War 3 Illustrated 1980-1988 (Fantagraphics Books, 1989) Ms. Ward based this document largely on the Kerner Commission report and also on a number of HUD department files that she and her collaborators apparently stole from the HUD office in Washington D.C.

Shortly after this document's original publication, Ms. Ward and two associates were accosted on a Washington street by two well-dressed white men, who singled out Ms. Ward from her two friends, ordered her at gunpoint to lie face down on the street, and then shot her in the back of the head.

6. THE GOLDEN TRIANGLE

Fuck 'em, both sides are square. - William S. Burroughs

A non-addictive panacea for adult ailments and infant respiratory diseases - Bayer's description, in 1898, of its new wonder drug diacetylmorphine or "heroin".(1)

In 1971, in a response to a suggestion from Harper & Row editor Elisabeth Jakob, Yale doctoral candidate Alfred W. McCoy set out for France and South East Asia to do research on the international heroin trade.(2) In the early 70's there was a heroin epidemic among American G.I.s in Vietnam where "scag" could be bought for $4.00 a vial. Conservative estimates figured the percentage of servicemen on junk to range between 20-30 percent strung out on the 90-99 percent pure Laotian commodity.(3) The troops in turn were bringing their horse habit back home to white middle class suburban neighborhoods that were unfamiliar with hard drugs or the organized crime that supplied them. The situation was such that President Nixon declared a "War on Drugs" in 1972 and New York State Governor Nelson Rockefeller turned from a "clean the dope fiends off the streets of New York" platform to a "compassion for the addicted, punishment for the pushers" pose realizing that many of his more privileged constituents now had sons and daughters who were heroin users.(4) At the same time California Congressman John Tunney was quoted in the New Yorker as saying "clandestine yet official operations of the US government could be aiding and abetting heroin traffic here at home" (5) Many members of the media also hinted that not only the corrupt governments of South Vietnam, Laos, Thailand and Burma, officially America's allies, were providing American servicemen with smack but US Intelligence, as well. It was in this climate that McCoy started his field research.

In Paris General Maurice Belleaux, the former head of French military intelligence detailed to McCoy how the SDECE (the French CIA) set up militias of Hmong hill people to fight the communist Viet Minh, gaining their support by providing transportation for the Hmong's cash crop opium. According to McCoy, Belleaux "inadvertently revealed" that the CIA inherited the covert French army/opium smuggling

Among settlements and seeing the poppies and guns first hand (as well as having the life of his translator threatened and his party shot at) McCoy paid a visit to the powerful General Ouane Rattikone, the owner of the country's largest Double U-O Globe Heroin refinery, posing as a reporter from Harper's Magazine. At Ouane's house he announced his desire "to profile our allies in the struggle against communism" to which the general enthusiastically agreed. When, half way through the interview, McCoy asked about accusations from his enemies that he had pilfered profits from the opium trade Ouane responded "Merde! That bastard Phoumi is gossiping again, I am going to stop these rumors for good!" referring to the former military dictator General Phoumi Nosavan. He proceeded to show McCoy his bookkeeping to demonstrate what a scrupulous businessman he was when in charge of the opium trade, even allowing McCoy to copy down figures. When McCoy telephoned the American Press Attaché at the US embassy in Vientiane to say that a "reliable source" had indicated that General Ouane once ran a large opium syndicate, the embassy officials told McCoy that the source was "not reliable." (6)

Once the book, detailing the complicity of the CIA and officials allied with the US in the Golden Triangle drug trade, was about to be published, McCoy describes in his introduction how the agency sought to suppress it. Cord Meyer Jr., a senior CIA official approached his former classmate Cass Canfield Sr., Harper & Row's owner and President Emeritus, and persuaded him to allow the agency editorial rights on the text. After considering going to another publisher McCoy managed to get the CIA's attempt to censor his work exposed on the front page of the New York Times, through the offices of his friend David Obst. Smarting from a lot of embarrassing media coverage Harper & Row published The Politics of Heroin as intended. (7)

According to McCoy's groundbreaking book, and other sources, the Laotian military, which before communist takeover was the only defense complex in the world besides the Pentagon which was completely funded by US tax payers,

Khun Sa, Burma's leading opium warlord and heroin manufacturer, in his headquarters at Mongmai in the Shan states near the Thai border, February 1989. Piers Cavendish supplemented American revenue with tribal opium. The CIA operatives who coordinated a secret Hmong army in northern Laos to fight communists under the ruthless General Vang Pao, could only turn a blind eye when the same Hmong people sold their opium crop to finance weapon purchases while knowing that much of the opium, once refined as heroin, would be sold to US servicemen or shipped directly to the States by the Mafia or other syndicates. Operatives even provided the CIA owned Air America to provide air transport for opium, in neighboring Burma fragments of the CIA/Thai government supported Nationalist Chinese Army, who had been driven out of China by Mao, along with tribal Shan warlords, conducted similar operations: smuggling, trading opium for guns and making generals rich. These smugglers have prospered to the present time in one form or another. In 1990 the Bush Administration indicted the Shan-Chinese opium baron Khun Sa on drug trafficking charges though so far the fate of Manuel Noriega has not befallen the Burmese warlord. (9)

Covert military funding through drug smuggling has been done throughout the twentieth century. Not to be outdone by the capitalists there is substantial evidence that Cuba and Bulgaria have also aided in and profited from the trade of narcotics (in Rachel Ehrenfeld's right wing exposé Narco Terrorism she practically blames all of the American drug problem on the perfidious communists, even after "Perestroika" mentioning the CIA as being most known for "revealing photos" while making no mention of US federal drug complicity.) (10) One of the best kept secrets of the Afghan resistance to Soviet occupation was the heroin trading being done by the CIA supported Majahedeen and Pakistani military. (11) Numerous former DEA (Drug Enforcement Agency) officials have also complained about the agency's protecting of major traffickers because of their perceived importance in fighting communism. Said Michael Levine, a former DEA agent, "We gave up the drug war in favor of a war against communism. In fact we made a conscious choice." (12)

7. KAUFMAN VS. WWF

The death of comedian and undefeated Inter-Gender Wrestling champion Andy Kaufman in 1984 was the result of an elaborate plot by the World Wrestling Federation to help boost the "sport's" sagging popularity and to keep him from revealing to the world that pro wrestling is faked.

Kaufman first raised the ire of the WWF in the late 1970's, when he began wrestling women on NBC's "Saturday Night Live." The dryness of his humor was such that many people could not distinguish whether or not he was joking.

Apparently assuming that he was serious the WWF set into motion an elaborate plot to first discredit Kaufman and ultimately to kill him. After repeated failures in trying to find a woman who could beat Kaufman in the ring, The WWF had it's heavyweight champion, Jerry "the King" Lawler challenge him to a wrestling match. Kaufman, a middleweight, suffered neck and back injuries that would haunt him the rest of his short life. Three months later, on "Late Night with David Letterman," Lawler slapped Kaufman across the face. The comedian responded by dumping a cup of coffee on Lawler and running for his life.

Kaufman was angered by the repeated humiliations and threatened to reveal the truth about pro wrestling on his next "Saturday Night Live" appearance. The WWF, oblivious to Kaufman's lack of credibility, strong-armed then-SNL producer Dick Ebersol into keeping Kaufman off the air.

On November 20, 1982, SNL held a live call-in vote on whether or not to ban Kaufman from the show. The audience voted 195,544 to 169,186 in favor of banning him. Rigging the vote was a simple task for the WWF, an empire built upon defrauding and deceiving its audience.

Sensing that Kaufman would not be deterred, the organization hired retired wrestler Fred Blassie to befriend Kaufman and later assassinate him. Kaufman interpreting Blassie's friendship as acceptance into the wrestling community, quickly placed his trust in him.

Blassie was able to convince Kaufman to scuttle his plans for exposing pro wrestling as a fraud and inspired Kaufman to produce a video starring the two of them.

Ironically enough, "My Breakfast with Blassie," the video that Blassie encouraged Kaufman to make contains the most incriminating piece of evidence that Blassie did in fact kill Kaufman. In the video, Blassie can clearly be seen spiking Kaufman's coffee with high doses of steroids, a practice which he engaged for the two years leading up to Kaufman's death.

Kaufman died of cancer on May 16, 1984, only five months after he was diagnosed with the disease. Though doctors involved refused to speculate on its cause, the overuse of steroids was implied.

Five months after Kaufman's death, The World Wrestling Federation and Hulk Hogan "mania" swept the country and catapulted pro wrestling to its greatest popularity ever. (GM)

8. DR. REICH BOOK BURN

Dr. Wilhelm Reich is not what you could call a household name. But his work and the books he wrote to chronicle it are certainly not unknown of by those who have wished to pursue and study them. This is definitely to the chagrin of the elite scientific community that would like to have solitary control of everything that develops under its vast canopy. Sound familiar, maybe even fanatic? Well Dr. Reich had also the (dis)pleasure of being one of the first but by no means lasts persons to fall victim to what Robert Anton Wilson calls in his book by the same name - The New Inquisition.

In his 30-some years of scientific research he developed a multitude of theories and demonstrated many of them. His most famous was the alleged existence of an energy characteristic of living beings which he called orgone. He could make it rain, championed "body work" and therapy to cure illnesses and insisted that nuclear energy in all its uses was unhealthy for humans. He authored numerous books including The Impulsive Personality, The Function of the Orgasm, Character Analysis, The Mass Psychology of Fascism, The Sexual Revolution, People in Trouble, The Murder of Christ, The Cancer Biopathy, and others.

He was denounced by many in "respected" science and when members of the American Medical Association and American Psychoanalytical Association pressured the government to prosecute Reich as a fraud or a "charlatan" he refused to admit that the government had any right to pass judgement on scientific theories and as a result was convicted only of contempt of court. Following the fairly successful defense of his theories in court the government was forced to resort to its more natural state. In October 1957, agents of the U.S. government went to the Orgone Institute Press in NYC, seizing all of Reich's books, they loaded them into a garbage truck; driving to the Vandervoort Street incinerator they preceded to burn them. They also managed to smash with an ax much of the equipment in Dr. Reich's research laboratory. He shortly thereafter was put in prison to die of a heart attack after only a few months. It would not be until 1967, a full ten years later, that his books could be legally published in the U.S.

9. ALIENS & BLACKOUTS

ENTIRE EAST COAST POWERLESS V. UFOS

"The failure of The Northeast Power Grid created one of the biggest mysteries in the history of modern civilization," wrote John G. Fuller in his 1966 blockbuster, Incident at Exeter. "Eighty thousand square miles and 36,000,000 people - one-fifth of the nation's population - were suddenly plunged into inexplicable darkness." Fuller's article for Look magazine created waves of reaction for a lot of obvious reasons (since he claimed UFOS werethe blackouts cause), and so he extended his 1965 article into book form. He is a damn compelling writer, but - unfortunately - Fuller's ability to pile heaps of convincing testimony and official documentation does not cover the sad flaw that there is no causal link revealed to show that UFOS actually caused the New York City Blackout of '65. Responsible journalism leads Fuller to admit such a link is "entirely circumstantial," but witness these circumstances (which accumulate some weight):

- "Utility companies looked for something to repair, but there was nothing."

- "Utilities were able to restore service with the exact same equipment that was in use at the time of the blackout."

- "If there had been a mechanical flaw, a fire, a breakdown, a short circuit, a toppling transmission tower, the cause would have been...detected."

- "Chairman of The Rochester Gas and Electric Corporation: "We don't know what happened to the 200,000 kilowatts. It just wasn't there."

- Repairmen found no lines down. FBI and State Troopers sent to investigate a report of willful destruction outside Syracuse, NY found nothing.

- 5:15 pm: There is something else outside Syracuse. At the near instant of The Blackout, Weldon Ross is landing his plane at Hancock Field. His passenger agrees with his description: a huge red ball hovers over the crux of New York Power Authority's two 345,000 Volt high tension power lines. Three others see the same object from the airstrip.

- 5:25 pm: A Holliston, Massachusetts schoolteacher watches through binoculars as a brilliant white object moves toward the tree line. She and her husband concur it's eerie path.

- 5:30 pm: David Hague, 17, also of Holliston notes identical object heading SW.

- 5:05 pm: Mrs. Gerry Falk: "I was driving along Mt. Prospect Avenue, West Orange, New Jersey...I noticed a red streak in the sky...It was shaped like a half moon. It was pale red, not like a flame...At first I thought it was a sky-writer."

- Mrs. Sol Kaplan of Central Park West, NYC: "I looked out the window...I saw a big circular dome - It was flying, but going up and down and sideways. It was silvery looking...I was looking through binoculars..."

- "Life photographer Arthur Rickerby took a dramatic picture of The New York City Skyline just after The Blackout. In the western sky, a brilliant, silvery object appears that has not in any satisfactory way been explained after it appeared in the November 19, 1965 issue of Time." Rickerby thinks it is an alien craft.

Fuller interviewed over 60 people claiming to have seen UFOS. In the process of reviewing his voluminous transcripts, Fuller found 73 citations in which UFOS appeared in the vicinity of high voltage power lines. However you wish to interpret the Great Blackout of '65, Fuller's explanation is probably the coolest. Other cool discoveries here are the "aliens on ice" at Wright-Patterson AFB, Dayton, Ohio. ## 10. GOD NOT DEAD

Contrary to reports from FILTH staff writer Friedrich Nietzsche, dateline Switzerland, God is NOT dead! Secret files smuggled out of the Vatican by a disgruntled Choirboy, escaping the arthritic claws of clerical pederasts, has provided our man in Rome with the following information: God is being kept in a secret laboratory 2000 feet beneath the Vatican in cryogenic suspended animation. There are no plans to revive him, however, as the Pope wishes for no challenge to his authority. (MF & RG)

11. HEMP

Hemp is the Earth's premier renewable resource. It has been harvested for 10,000 years. According to Jack Herer's book The Emperor Wears No Clothes, from 75% to 90% of the world's paper was made with cannabis hemp. And 70% to 90% of all rope was made from hemp until 1937 when it was replaced with petrochemical fibers. Hemp seeds are high in protein and have been used in a myriad of industrial oils. Extracts from the leaves and flowers of the hemp plant have been used for centuries in a variety of healing tonics and medicines. And the relaxational effects of cannabis hemp are well known. Why, in 1937, would the United States government suddenly outlaw such a completely useful plant; one that's played such an important role in the evolution of human culture and civilization? Was it a conspiracy or had hidden dangers really been discovered that posed a threat to public safety...You decide.

HEMP IN THE USA

Hemp runs through the very fabric of America. According to Emperor, the first marijuana law in America was enacted in 1619 in Jamestown Virginia, ordering all farmers to grow Hemp. Fines were levied against those who refused to grow it. According to Herer, "Cannabis hemp was legal tender in most of the Americas from 1631 until the early 1800's." (p.1) So, no wonder, you could pay your taxes with Cannabis hemp throughout America for over 200 years. And, hemp helped fuel the American Revolution when Ben Franklin started the first paper mill in America with hemp. This allowed America to have a free colonial press without having to get supplies from England. Among other things, virtually all flags and canvas were made from hemp fiber, the first and second drafts of the Declaration of Independence were written on hemp paper, and Abraham Lincoln's wife Mary Todd came from Kentucky's richest hemp growing family.

After the Civil War, cotton replaced hemp as the country's most popular fabric due to the cotton gin which made cotton production cheaper. However, hemp remained America's second most popular fabric, until nylon came along to replace it.

"A NEW BILLION DOLLAR CROP"

In February 1938, in an article titled "New Billion Dollar Crop", Popular Mechanics introduced the first fully operational mechanical hemp fiber stripping machine. The machine, called the decoricator, separated the hemp fiber strands from the "woody hurds". Suddenly, it was possible to manufacture hemp paper mechanically and with less cost, waste of fiber, and pollution than paper made from wood pulp. Popular Mechanics wrote lengthy descriptions of the virtues of hemp farming, including the fact that "10,000 acres devoted to hemp will produce as much paper as 40,000 acres of average [wood] pulp land"

THE HEARST CONNECTION

William R. Hearst owned mass quantities of timber acreage. He, along with the rest of the timber/pulp industry "stood to lose billions of dollars and perhaps go bankrupt" with the invention of the hemp decorticator machine. So what did he do? He turned his newspapers into a propaganda machine against that evil weed marijuana with headlines like, "Marijuana makes fiends of boys after 30 days; Hasheesh Goads Users To Blood Lust"! He often quoted Harry Anslinger, the newly appointed head of the newly formed Federal Bureau of Narcotics (FBN), whose favorite line was, "If the hideous monster Frankenstein came face to face with the monster marijuana he would drop dead of fright." In fact, Hearst coined the word marijuana simply by using it so often in his papers. The term, marijuana is foreign. It's easier to whip up fear about something that's foreign. Hearst preyed on the public's fear of drug addiction that had reigned since the popularity of morphine and heroin in the 20's and 30's had amassed over "200,000 heroin addicts in the U.S. alone". States one headline, "New Dope Lure, Marijuana, has Many Victims". According to Jack Herer, Hearst deliberately placed articles on the front page about a car accident in which a joint was found in the back seat, while reports about alcohol induced accidents were buried in the back pages.

DUPONT INVENTS NYLON

After the end of World War I, the DuPont Co., which had been a manufacturer of explosives and ammunition, was looking for peace time uses for plastics and artificial fibers. They poured million$ into research which resulted in the invention of nylon and rayon. Nylon became an unnatural substitute to hemp rope, and Rayon became a popular clothing material. The DuPont Co. waxed poetic about the virtues of these "miracle" man made fibers in their annual reports to their stock holders. If hemp had been allowed to provide direct competition to DuPont's synthetic fibers, chances are "80% of DuPont's business would never have come to be; nor would a great majority of the pollution [which has] inflicted our NW and SE rivers ever have occurred."

THE MARIJUANA TAX ACT

In 1937, Congress passed the Marijuana Tax Act, which effectively outlawed cannabis hemp by imposing a restrictive tax on it. Suddenly, growers had to register with the government. Buyers and sellers had to get through miles of bureaucratic red tape, and it was a federal crime for failure to comply with the new law. The federal tax was $100 for selling an ounce or less of cannabis hemp to an unregistered buyer. At the time, in 1937, legal cannabis hemp sold for $2 a pound. "In 1992 dollars, the federal tax would be roughly $2,000 per ounce." So, as the demand for hemp dried up, farmers stopped harvesting it and hemp paper never competed with wood pulp paper, just as hemp rope never gave the synthetic petroleum based nylon a run for its money.

Conspiracy or Coincidence?

Just how did Congress suddenly become convinced to restrict hemp commerce? In fact, just 7 years prior to passing the Marijuana Tax Act, the United States government formed the Siler Commission, in 1930, to study the effects of marijuana of off duty servicemen stationed in Panama. The commission found no dangerous, or long lasting effects from recreational marijuana use, and recommended against imposing penalties for using it.

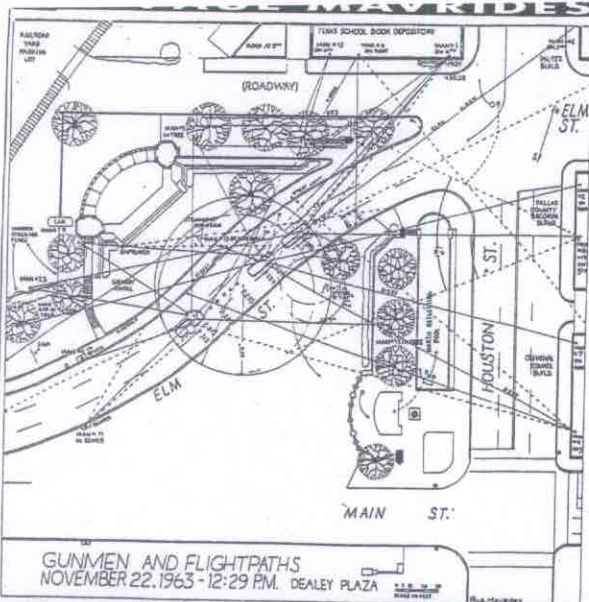

According to Jack Herer, a series of secret meetings were held in which various prohibitive tax laws against hemp were drafted and debated. Herer suggests that DuPont and Hearst worked together with Harry Anslinger, the head of the Federal Bureau of Narcotics. Anslinger was appointed to this post by Treasury Secretary Andrew Mellon, the chair of the Mellon Bank of Pittsburgh, DuPont's primary financial backer. Anslinger used his political power to sway Congress to vote for the hemp tax. He dismissed the AMA's arguments that there were hundreds of medical uses for cannabis. Others testified against the tax, too, including the National Oil Seed Co. which urged the House Ways and Means Committee to reconsider effectively outlawing a plant that's been in use since the dawn of civilization. The hearings were dominated by Anslinger, however, who read excerpts from Hearst's newspaper articles where he was quoted extensively, extolling the evils of marijuana. "Marijuana is the most violence causing drug in the history of mankind", said Anslinger. Congress passed the tax, and it was only a matter of time before marijuana was completely outlawed, thanks to Anslinger's furious lies. Herer contends that the big industrialists and multimillionaire big shots like DuPont and Hearst, and Mellon knew in advance that the hemp decorticator and harvesting machines were being developed. So they got together to smear hemp by calling it marijuana, and spreading lies about its effects on otherwise innocent people.

All quotes are from Jack Herer's book. The Emperor Wears No Clothes. For a complete, detailed, and well researched account of the conspiracy to outlaw hemp I highly recommend Emperor. It's available from HEMP Publishing 5632 Van Nuys Blvd., Van Nuys, Ca. 91401 for $14.95 plus tax. (LL)

13. OLLIE'S TRIP

SBLIMNL MSSGS N LVR STN'S JFK

The following are examples of subliminal images that appear in the film JFK. Dean Grace compiled this list using the slow motion and freeze-frame controls on a VCR. Excerpted from Secret and Suppressed, Edited by Jim Kieth (Peral House, 1993)

GARRISON QUESTIONS homosexual convict O'Keefe. In the flashback homosexual party scenes, there appears a full-screen subliminal skull, then a rat in a cage, and then an image of a skull in the background over Shaw's raised left hand. All this can only be caught by advancing the movie frame by frame.

DURING A carnival parade, an American flag is lowered to expose a huge human skull.

SEEN IN David Ferrie's apartment following his death are a skull, rats and religious figurines.

GARRISON TRAVELS to Washington D.C., to meet with former intelligence agent, "X." Leaving the Lincoln Memorial Garrison opens an umbrella and raises it over his head. Agent "X" instantly recognizes Garrison, and their talk begins. Passerby likewise open their umbrellas, though it does not appear to be raining.

WHILE "X" gives Garrison a short lesson in geopolitics and nuclear war, the Washington Monument in the background appears like it has become an ICBM about to lift off, complete with yellow exhaust fumes.

A MAN in a dark suit passes by the three tramps and gives a secret hand sign for the tramps benefit.

DURING WILLY O'Keefe's testimony on the witness stand, scene flashes to a homosexual meeting between Shaw and O'Keefe. Above Shaw's left hand in the corner of the screen is the image of a human skull. A frame-by-frame analysis reveals that the skull opens its mouth in horror, and seems like it is about to explode.

KENNEDY WAVES as his car passes through Dealey Plaza. Scene momentarily shifts to a close-up of a man wearing eyeglasses similar to Garrison's. The image of a four-legged, deer-like animal moves across the reflection of the glasses. A gunshot cracks out.

MAN AIMS rifle with telescopic sight at Kennedy. Camera zooms in for an extreme close-up. Scene shifts to the objective lens of the telescopic sight. A reflection of an emotionless face in freeze-frame can be seen in the lens of the sight. This face then metamorphoses into another face with a wild-eyed, devilish grin. This face then disappears, and then light begins to emanate from within the sight. This emanation gives the impression that the telescopic sight has now become the projection lens of a movie projector.

AFTER JAMES Tague is nicked by a stray bullet, scene changes to Clay Shaw holding an umbrella over his head. Several frames later the scene changes to a younger dark-haired man holding an umbrella over his own head.

16. MOON MASQUERADE

ONE GIANT STEP FOR. So I picked up We Never Went to the Moon by Bill Kaysing and hey, I think it's a Hoot. Kaysing was a Rocketdyne Co. quality control engineer who quit in 1963- a whistleblower type. Rocketdyne made the engines for the Apollo program and tested them in the mountains near the San Fernando Valley where I was a pup. Kaysing actually does a good job reporting on what a bunch of hype NASA was, as part of ye olde Military Industrial Complex. I admit he got to me, on one point- they could have made an X out of mylar strips to reflect sunlight that would have been visible proof to anyone with a small telescope. NASA said they didn't make any visible marker on the Moon for ENVIRONMENTAL and AESTHETIC reasons. That did it! NASA? The agency that wants to put Billboards in Space and use H-bombs to strip-mine the Moon? Kaysing describes a little-chronicled subculture of rampant engineers in the 1950s drinking on the job, sexually active on the Test Site, making patio supports out of rocket steel. Fun- but lunar-capable? He finds fault with the pictures- no stars, inconsistent shadows, etc. Also no crater or disturbance below the Lunar Landing Module, despite the 30,000 lb. thrust rocket engine generating heat of 5000 degrees. Well, maybe Bill has something after all. He does some coverage of dissent inside NASA, astronauts and engineers who openly declared the project a crock. Kaysing speculates the MoonFakers operating on the Nevada Test Site, with special effects honed on Stanley Kubrick's 2001 movie. Astronauts film fake moon landing. Astronauts drink, gamble in Las Vegas while the space craft is sent into a parking orbit then jettisoned into the South Polar Sea. Fresh from the buffet tables of the Dunes Casino, the astronauts are installed in the re-entry vehicle and dropped into the Pacific from a C-5 cargo plane for their splashdown and recovery. Could be. All I can actually prove is that in 1969, Richard Nixon said we landed on the moon. (FR)

17. SUPERSCAM

Needing a quick-fix solution after Time/Warner execs told them to raise their market share or lose their jobs, the staff of DC Comics announced the death of Superman. Mass media outlets treated it as major news. Network programs included the Super Hero in year-end roundups of (real) celebrities who had died in '92, while The New York Times proclaimed that the 'event' symbolized the coming of a more human hero-Bill Clinton. Little matter that a similar overhauling of the character had been trumpeted in the same places a few years earlier, or that he was quickly resurrected and given a new TV show, in corporate controlled news, a comic book character can be represented with the same reality as actual people, assuming reality ever enters these forums. ### 18. HOOSIER HOMEGROWN

DAN QUAYLE'S DOPE DEALER, THE SPEEDWAY BOMBER. Lawschool can get a little boring at Indiana University, so why not kick back and light that magic-jay- bone, or maybe have an Acid party at your Frat house. Maybe that's what Dan Quayle was thinking...serving his time in Southern Indiana...not really thinking too much about his future...too bad his dealer was Brett Kimberlin, aka The Speedway Bomber. Brett Kimberlin was convicted in 1979, of drug smuggling and explosive charges for a series of bombings around Indianapolis, in a suburb called Speedway (named after the Indianapolis 500 race track). He planted green hefty bags loaded with explosive charges around the area; people who happened to stumble upon them tended to get blown-up. Caught, he was sentenced to a 57 year prison term, (his release is Feb. 1994). Four days before the 1988 Presidential election, he tried to hold a press conference, claiming that he had once sold pot to Dan Quayle. He was quietly returned to his cell and held in solitary confinement.

Brett Kimberlin has now filed a lawsuit, claiming that the Bush/Quayle campaign was involved in a conspiracy to silence him, with the help of J. Michael Quinlin, the "highest (no pun intended) official of the Bureau of Prisons" claiming that his first amendment rights had been violated. Orders from the Justice Departments director of public affairs, Loye W. Miller Jr, claimed that Kimberlin's life was in danger, although unverified. Quinlin states that Kimberlin is the only known inmate to be placed in solitary on orders from a bureau director. Kimberlin stayed in solitary from the friday before the Tuesday election, until six days after the election. (sources; J. B. Adams, Stephan Labaton, NY Times, (SMM)

coffee with a woman. There are several things connected to Sirhan's unusual mental state. As a jockey, Sirhan received a head injury in 1966 and may have become one of the most deeply hypnotizable people in the world. He was later to explore several "mind control" groups and it is there that the CIA may have become interested in him. In 1968 a doctor named William Jennings Bryan, who was said to be the "evil genius" of hypnotism, his ties to the CIA were known and is said to have boasted that both Sirhan and Albert Di Salvo, the Boston Strangler were amongst his clients. Interestingly enough he would also serve as the technical consultant on the film version of The Manchurian Candidate. Notebooks found in Sirhan's apartment that he also fails to remember writing in contain what is seemingly automatic trance-writing; in these he scribbled repeatedly "My determination to eliminate RFK is becoming more and more of an unshakable obsession" and "Pay to the order of one hundred thousand dollars" and "Salvo Di De Salvo Die S Salvo." Could these just be a couple of examples of how seriously manipulated Sirhan had been prior to his assassination attempt. But no matter what the causes of his trances and erased segments of memory, and despite his claims that he acted alone, the evidence of his teamwork with Khaiber Khan and the Poika-Dot Woman, along with the overwhelmingly certainty of another gun pumping the fatal shots into RFK from behind, prove that Sirhan did not act alone, and played the second decoy patsy for an assassination network that clearly extended to the highest reaches of the U.S. government. 28. JACKIE HAULS ASS

Among the obscurities for which comedian Lenny Bruce was found guilty in New York in 1964, was his comment that "Jacqueline Kennedy is hauling ass at the moment of the late President's assassination." One year later, Bruce explained this comment in his penultimate performance.

"I saw at the time, in Time magazine, some distortions. I said, I believe when the president was killed and the governor got it and the old lady (Jackie Kennedy) hauled ass to save her ass, I saw some different captions in the pictures.

"Now on the first picture I saw, it said she was helping (the Secret Service agent) aboard (the Car). The guy wasn't lost. He didn't get a medal for being helped aboard the car. She hauled ass to save her ass!

"And the problem with saying she was helping the guy aboard, is that if my daughter ever sat with her husband and he got shot and she hauled ass, she'd always feel low and guilty, because she wasn't like the good woman who stayed. And the people don't stay. You can't make the false image and make my daughter pay the dues.

"In fact, what did happen there, and I'm sure, is that the chick was panicked and she heard 'We've been hit, lets get out of here!' Well, she didn't know 'Let's get out of here' meant to get out of the line of fire, so she went to get out of the car."

Lenny Bruce went bankrupt from the legal fees involved in fighting his three obscenity trials. He died of a heroin overdose in 1965. (GM)

30. FREE ENERGY

Try this experiment. Ask a friend what they know about Nikola Tesla and - odds are even - they'll give you a blank expression before saying:

"Uh, you mean, that band?"

Aargh! No! The scientist!

If you happen to be one of the "Uh..." group, well, here's a brief run-down:

Becoming famous at the turn of the century as The Archetypical Mad Scientist for his many inventions - today - most people have much memory of the man. At least some have heard of a Tesla Coil, those crazy-looking-towers-of-copper-and-wire-that-send-out-million-plus-Volts-of-dramatic-noisy-fur-knarlid-crackling-streams-of-Frankenstein-lab-type-no-shit-real-lightning bolts. Yeah, you know - those things...

The actual purpose of which was to demonstrate the effects of high frequency /high Voltage energy production. The alternating current motor was another of many accomplishments. It's the one which he was probably screwed over and exploited for the most. The one thing that elevated him to the ranks of top scientist of all time, it earned him wide-spread respect and fame.

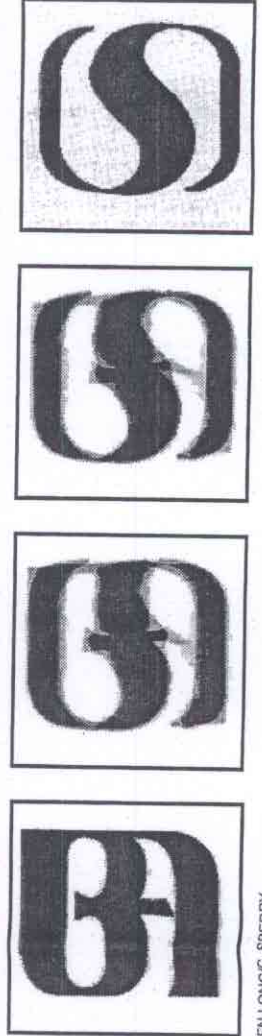

Unfortunately, Tesla's "respect" would not generally be known until 10-15 years after his death. It was only until further advancements in electrical science had been made that it became apparent that Tesla was indeed responsible for many advances in the development of electrical power production, transmission and use in the modern city. In other words bub, no Tesla, no toaster...dig?.

Look, how much do you know about the guy? I don't really remember hearing much about him in school. Why? Well, the fact that he worked for that fucker Edison probably didn't help much. Yeah, yeah, I know. Edison was a genius in the truest sense. However, that didn't stop him from being a fucker nonetheless. Edison's DC power motor was the source of all the electricity being used in the US at the time. When Tesla introduced his much more energy efficient AC motor it created suppression by Edison (fueled by pro jealousy and competition - at least initially). Edison's DC turbine necessitated one power station per 5 square miles. Tesla's is still in use ... one DC turbine system lighting the entire Eastcoast. In addition, many people feel that Nikola Tesla was the inventor of radio (!!!). Rockin'! No Tesla, no tunes...

Although Marconi was officially credited with this invention, he probably couldn't have accomplished the feat without his use of Tesla's patent for wireless transmission of radio waves which were developed by him a decade earlier. Daaaamn!

Okay, so you want conspiracies? Fuck! There's tons of 'em surrounding this guy, far too many to put into synopsis here. He was too much of an eccentric, too much of a genius, and just plain too far ahead his time. He could visualize machines and tool them in a shop without plans and they were always built as imagined, functioning perfectly. In his fucking head, mind you! (NL)

The White House & Congress had an image problem, namely that they had allowed billions in insured deposits to vanish. If the bailout had occurred in 1986, instead of after the 1988 elections, it would've only costed 20 billion.

CHARLIE KEATING BOUGHT UP LINCOLN SAVINGS TO MOVE HIS JUNK BONDS ONTO CONFUSED RETIREES. BRIBED HIGH PROFILE SENATORS TO KEEP THE HEAT OFF. LINCOLN'S FAILURE WOUND UP COSTING $2.5 BILLION, A FRACTION OF THAT IF THEY'D MOVED ON HIM SOONER. BIG JAIL TERM.

DO NOT DIXON STARTED OUT IN CONSTRUCTION. BOUGHT VERNON S & L. WHEN HE SAW THE POTENTIAL, DEVELOPMENT DEALS WITH HIS OWN COMPANY & LEFT FRIENDS START UP FOR THEIR OWN SCAMS. BAILOUT: $1.3 BILLION. DIXON'S DOING 3 YRS. MIN. SEC.

By now, if you haven't figured out your own scam, you've run up some company assets, sell 'em on payments, and burn the place down for the insurance money. Then put it all in numbered accounts overseas. If your mark should catch on? Just rat on your friends and plead not guilty. A dealer gets in to take it all. If the right should happen, you're only looking at about 24 months country club time. Time to practice that golf swing!

THE PONZI SCHEME (or pyramid) was named for Charles Ponzi, an Italian con-man from the 1920's. In short, early investors are lured in with promises of quick financial reward, then paid off with funds suckered from later investors, and so on. The best one to get stuck in the scam are left holding the worthless prop- erty, etc.

Confidence Game: swindle in which the victim is deceived after the confidence is won. In the S&L racket, plenty of scams work. The legal limit on a loan given to a single individual is no problem if you've got a plenty of folks to share it. Steve Perry, a former A-10 pilot, direct supervisor of a head loan to a friend who ran off with a Klek. Back and defaults. When S&Ls sell each other, each other's worthlessness property to tuping its value and using it as collateral on a huge loan. It's known as a Land Flip.

If money makes you richer than money then you gotta take money, right? That's where the scam is. Brokered Deposit. You drive up your interest rates and the brokerage firm moves billions of group-invested dollars (broken into federally insured parcels) into CD accounts. Then you head for the racetrack.

IN SLEEPY GUERNVILLE, ERWIN HANSEN WENT FROM STAID BANKER TO BIG TIME SPENDER. HIS REAL ESTATE SCAMS ARE LEGENDS. BY 1985 CENTENNIAL SAVINGS FAILED WITH $165 MILLION IN DEBTS. ERV DIED MYSTERIOUSLY ONE DAY BEFORE HE WAS TO TESTIFY AGAINST HIS PARTNERS.

REAGAN APPOINTED THIS FORMER CIA CHIEF & TROKIMANT TO HEAD A DEREGULATION TASK FORCE

In 1980, the S&L industry was in a stable, slow growth pattern, hence the name "thrill". The average savings deposit was $6,000, but the FDIC insured up to 40,000. Under Reagan's deregulation plan, that figure increased to $100,000. This move "stimulated" competition (robbery) overnight.

By 1982 S&Ls had the best Congress money could buy. The Game-St. Germane Act welcomed the new junk bond "entrepreneurs" by mixing requirements like multiple ownership, locally-based boards of trustees, & substantial investments in local home mortgages. In CA. & TX, the controls were even looser.

street car system. How did they do it? Rather than buy up a company and start a new one, they simply "worked" with an existing transit company; the Omnibus Corporation. Overnight, the nation's largest electric rail system was transformed into gasoline burning buses.

With this feather in their cap, GM stormed the country. They bought up mass transit companies by the dozens using a small Illinois company as a front. When their front company became too large to finance, GM transformed it into a holding company called National City Lines. They then went after investors who could also benefit from the destruction of the electric rail systems. "By 1937, [the same year hemp was outlawed] Greyhound Bus Lines, Firestone Tire and Rubber Co, Mack Manufacturing, Standard Oil of California, and Phillips Petroleum had also joined up, investing $10 million altogether." By 1955 only 5,000 streetcars remained in the entire U.S. out of a fleet that had numbered 40,000 in 1936.

When GM and the others involved were indicted in 1949 for violating anti-trust laws, they claimed that the National City Lines was an independent company that they had invested in because transit companies were a good investment. (Gee, I wonder why...)

In truth, GM, Firestone, Mack, Phillips Petroleum, and Standard Oil of California invested in National City Lines under the conditions that the NCL buy GM and Mack busses, use Firestone tires, and purchase Standard Oil, or Phillips petroleum for all their oil needs. The NCL was so independent that its offices were run by the employees of the investing companies. What's more, National City Lines was not allowed to "buy another street car or any other piece of equipment that would use any fuel or method of propulsion other than gasoline" (The "Great Transportation Conspiracy," by Jonathan Kwitny, Harper's magazine Feb. 1981)

In the end, every company involved in the conspiracy to take over mass transit bailed out and sold their stock as soon as the electric rail system had been replaced.

The conspirators: GM, National City Lines, Firestone, Mack, Standard Oil of Ca., and Phillips Petroleum were all convicted of violating anti-trust laws in a federal court. They were fined a mere $5,000 each. Company employees who were found guilty were fined a whole dollar.

40. BANNED BOOKS

Since 387 BC, books have often been the focus of controversy, with the result often being the banning of free speech, and the banning of the books themselves.

From Voltare to Vonnegut, Banned Books Week (Sept 26-Oct 2) is a bookstore holiday celebrating the rights to the freedom to read.

It showcases books that have been banned through time, either through schools, or public objection, on the grounds that the written word can have disastrous effects on youngsters or the public that reads them. Recently limelighted was Madonna's SEX book, creating front page news, along with bringing up the question of who exactly has the rights to deem anything unfit to read...

Another case had to do with national security; (as example: Marchetti, Victor and Marks, John D. The CIA and the Cult of Intelligence. The CIA obtained a court injunction against its publication (1972) Towards the close of the "74-75 term, the US Supreme Court declined for the 2nd time to review an appeal by the authors, upholding the CIA's right to enforce its secrecy agreement with Marchetti, requiring him to submit material before publication.)

Instead of listing all the books in the world that have been banned, the following list contains only books that have been banned from March 1992-March 1993...read 'em and weep...

-Atwood, Margaret The Handmaids Tale. (92) Challenged Waterloo Iowa schools; profanity, sex, statements defamatory to minorities, God the disabled and Women.

-Barth, Edna Witches, Pumpkins, and Greeting Ghosts. (92) Neely Elem. school Gilbert Ariz. It "interests little minds into accepting the devil with all of his evil works".

-Beisner, Monika. Secret Spells and Curious Charms. Complaints of it being a "how-to" book for Satanism. (May 92-Salem-Kietzer Org. school board).

-The Bible. Challenged by an Atheist, "seeking to turn the tables on the religious right", stating "the lewd, indecent, and violent contents of that book are hardly suitable for young children." (Minn. indep. School dist.).

-Blume, Judy. Blubber. Stating; "Bad is never punished. Good never comes to force. Evil is triumphant." (Perry Township, Ohio elem.).

-Bradbury, Ray. Fahrenheit 451. Students recieved copies with words blacked out (like "hell" and "damn"). The book is about censorship and book burning. (July 92-Venado Middle school, Irvine Ca.)

-Daul, Roald. James and the Giant Peach. Contains a foul word and promotes the use of drugs and whiskey. (Morton Elem. Brookville Fla)

-Brothers Grimm. Hansel and Gretel. Teaches children that it's acceptable to kill witches, painting them as child eating monsters. (92-Mount Diablo, Ca.)

-Hinton, Susie E. The Outsiders. Glamourizes smoking and drinking, excessive violence and obscenities. (Boone Iowa school Dist.)

-Ibsen, Henrik. Four Great Plays by Ibsen. The play, Ghosts, dealing with incest, venereal disease, and suicide. (92-Carroll County, MD schools)

-Madonna. Sex. Loud objections from public libraries in Mesa Ariz, Austin Tx, Colorado Springs Co, St. Louis Mo, Omaha Neb, Champaign Il, Manchester con, South Bend In, Topeka Kan...

-Mowat, Farley. Woman in the Mists: The story of Dian Fossey & the Mountain Gorillas of Africa. Contains racial slurs, degrading to women, profanity, and a long discussion of Fossey's abortion. (Omaha Neb).

-Newman Leslea. Gloria Goes to Gay Pride and Heather Has Two Mommies. The school board objected to words that were "a g e inappropriate". (Brooklyn, NY.)

-Salinger, J. D. Catcher in the Rye. Although commonly banned, this year it was on the grounds that it contains pre-marital sex, profanities, alcohol abuse, prostitution, lurid passages about sex, statements defamatory to women, God, minorities, and the disabled, along with it being immoral. (Sidell, Ill/ Waterloo Iowa/ Duval County Fla/ Carsille Pa-all 92)

-Spiegelman, Art and Mouley, Francoise. RAW. Challenged in Roseburg Ore. because "it's full of cartoon pornography". (Jan 93)

-Twin, Mark. The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn and Adventures of Tom Sawyer. Temporarily pulled in Portage Mich, for its portrayal of blacks. Kinston NC and Modesto Ca for the use of the word "nigger".

-Walker, Alice. The Color Purple. Because the main character is raped by her stepfather. (New Bern NC High School). Challenged by Souderton, Penn area school district because it is "smut". -Zindel, Paul. Pigman. The novel contains 29 instances of "destructive, disrespectful, anti-social, and illegal behavior...placed in humorous light, making it seem acceptable".

Ranging from questions of morality to the separation of Church and State, the list of banned books will always continue to grow...

41. GENERATION PBS

How can any parent "just say no" to Generation-I, the "I want" phase of every child ages 2-12.

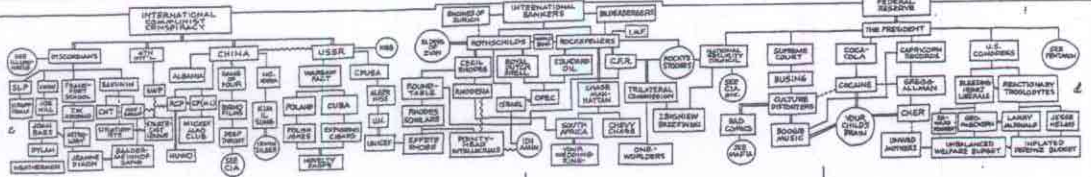

Under the guise of good standing and manners, brought on by an onslaught of moral lessons preached to you by the sermons from The Childrens Television Marketplace, Educational TV has always expanded on the fact that there's more to a parents pocketbook then meets the eye, especially when a Giant Purple Tyrannasaurus Rex is taking a bite out of (SMM)

42. GET A LIFE

Here is the truth about the Kennedy assassination that "they" don't want you to know. Lee Harvey Oswald was a lone nut who got off a lucky shot. The Warren Commission was right and didn't cover anything up. After all, wouldn't it be a little hard to get Bobby to go along with some plot that killed his own brother? "They" want to believe that there was a conspiracy because "they" couldn't believe what happened at the time.

HOW TO ASSEMBLE THIS FLOW-CHART!

- PULL OUT CENTERSPREAD CAREFULLY
- CUT OUT THE FOUR STRIPS ALONG THE HEAVY BLACK LINES.
- TAPE STRIPS END TO END, SO THAT CODE LETTERS ON STRIP EDGES ARE IN ALPHABETICAL ORDER.
- GRASP ENDS OF FOUR JOINED STRIPS AND HALF-TWIST ONCE
- TAPE ENDS TOGETHER, MAKING A 40CM LONG STRIP.

"They", of course, are baby boomers. The generation so full of themselves that they actually came up with a name for their generation for the first time in American history. Baby boomers would have you believe that everyone knows where they were and what they were doing when they heard JFK died. Hey, I don't. Many Americans were not even alive then. Does remembering where you were confer some kind of wisdom that I don't know about? At the time of the Kennedy assassination most baby boomers were in their childhood or their teens. They were young enough that they actually believed that the president was a good man who had their best interests at heart. Given what happened later in the sixties, they believed that if only JFK had survived everything would be all right.

Kennedy actually wasn't that hot a president. He got elected on a campaign of curing the "missile gap". He wanted to give the military as much money as they wanted. He was part of the military industrial complex that Eisenhower warned us about. As president, JFK started the missile buildup. There were four ICBM's in the U.S. when he came to power. He called for having as arsenal of 1000 (the number of missiles he picked because 100 was too few and 10,000 was too many). He got us closer to nuclear war than any other president. He invaded Cuba. He helped set up death squads in Latin America. If he had survived he would not have gotten us out of Vietnam. JFK was the biggest hawk we have ever had in the White House since Teddy Roosevelt.

One of the biggest Kennedy conspiracy people is Jim Garrison, the man portrayed by Kevin Costner in the Oliver Stone movie. A little known fact about this DA from Louisiana was that he was involved in dirty political dealings. In 1966 Garrison refused to prosecute a case against alligator poachers. The poachers were caught red handed with a warehouse full of alligator skins. The poachers were on tape talking to undercover fish and game wardens offering to sell and buy the skins. Garrison didn't give a shit about the Kennedy assassination but knew he could get national attention by bringing the case up.

Forget about the Kennedy assassination. Boomers in their insecurity believe that the world is obsessed with finding out why their childhood hero was killed. Hey, he was killed by a nut. Get a life. (M P)

43. ARMY SLURPLUS

While the administration strives to remove bureaucratic boondoggles like worker safety programs, and the foreign-born and unemployed are assailed as 'drains' on the economy, the Pentagon spends more than $400,000 a minute. The U.S. currently has $90 billion of surplus military equipment on hand; enough to last twenty to forty years in some cases. Despite warehouses of spare parts, items are often replaced rather than repaired. Cost overruns, mismanagement, and accounting slips add to the tab. An $880,000 Air Force ammo bill was mistakenly listed as $333 million dollars. Could happen anyone. All the same, where do all these billions wind up? (EY)

44. HACKER CRACKDOWN

BOOK REVIEW THE HACKER CRACKDOWN-BY BRUCE STERLING (BANTAM-1992)

If you've read the rest of this issue, then you probably had your fill of evil government theories. Time to turn the tables...the Government's afraid of you! (especially if you're on-line). In the Hacker Crackdown, Bruce Sterling lays us in on government conspiracy theories about Joe Online.

Bruce Sterling is the cyberdude who edited Mirrorshades, The definitive cyberpunk anthology. Aside from writing short stories and novels of his own and in collaboration with William Gibson, he is the Jello Biafra of cyberpunk. The main source for information on real-life cyber events.

Apparently the secret service, given jurisdiction in 1984 over computer crime, tells scary stories about what hackers are really upto. "...and when he came off-line, there was a hook in the modem!" and "...get out of the house, the other guy is calling from your attic!" is how some of these stories end.

They seem to be especially concerned about the chaotic ramifications of the 911 and 411 lines switched or shut down, Bank /Wall Street/Pentagon computer systems crashing and various sorts of line mischief.

Sterling is quite comprehensive, covering from Bell's invention of the telephone to the early ninties. From Operation Sundevil to the Legion Of Doom, Sterling leaves no disk unbooted. Score him additional conspiracy points for tying in the mysterious suicide of Abbie Hoffman.

This book is a must read for conspiracy theorists, BBS users, and cyberpunk fans. And remember kiddies, the secret service is watching you, and they're scared silly.-(BS)

45. MOTHER FAKIR

46. WHO IS G. POSNER?

Gerald Posner is the author of the current best-seller, boldly titled Case Closed: Lee Harvey Oswald and the Assassination of JFK. This book arrived on the scene fully endorsed by mass media. In addition to a PBS special that used Posner as its primary interview subject, U.S. News & World Report excerpted part of the book as its cover story, calling it "brilliant" and that it "proves who killed Kennedy."

Those seeking revelation on the subject should look elsewhere, this work totally supports the findings of Earl Warren's Possee. Case Closed denounces all the major theories, as well as the 1979 House Select Committee's assertion that "there probably was a conspiracy". Posner is a former Wall Street lawyer who presents his case like a very snotty and boring prosecuting attorney. Not only does he discount (and ignore) very compelling and interesting evidence, Posner mocks people like Mark Lane, David Lifton, Jim Garrison and, especially, Oliver Stone.

Hell, everybody knows half the stuff in Stone's film JFK is pure speculation, that's why it's so enjoyable. But while Posner manages to knock everyone else, his own research is a complete joke. The worst example is his misuse of eyewitness testimony. Like Paul Landis, a Secret Service agent who was positioned between the grassy knoll and the book depository, Posner cites Landis's testimony on the timing of the first shot. He doesn't mention that Landis (who has no motive for lying) heard shots coming from the direction of the grassy knoll. He leaves out Earlene Roberts's account of the police car that parked outside Oswald's rooming house at 1pm and honked twice. But Posner uses her testimony that she saw him leave with his jacket. His one-shooter thesis hinges on computer-enhancement done by San Francisco-based Failure Analysis Associates. The firm's CEO, Roger McCarthy, calls Posner's use of the data a "fundamental misrepresentation".

Worst of all is how Posner characterizes conspiracy hounds as doing a disservice to the memory of JFK., when his work is nothing short of historical revisionism. (RC)

47. D.B. PEROT?

D.B. Cooper, last modern day counter culture hero/pirate of the last frontier; the air. Apparently, he was an armed robber/pirate, who robbed a whole jet-load of people at gun point, parachuting away a rich man, never to be found.

Little do people know he landed in Dallas/Ft. Worth, changing his name to Ross Perot, and grifting away a fortune at the local economy to become the master financier to the Nixon campaign; bringing our boys home from Viet Nam, and to be the voice of the "silent majority".

An amateur of politics, with a grass-roots background, he can only reply "no sweat" when it comes to arming the public against urban crime and social ills, for us people.

If he wasn't short and old, we would call him "Batman". (SMM)

48. L.S.D.U.S.M.C.

According to Bruce Schlain and Martin A. Lee in their book Acid Dreams, Maj. General William Cressy had plans to gas the New York subway (or whichever subway would prove convenient) with debilitating psychoactive gas to see what the effect would be on an unsuspecting civilian population. Cressy envisioned the principle of bloodless warfare, in which the population of an enemy power's city would be bombed with LSD or BZ (quinclidinyl benzilate) in gas form rendering the population physically unharmed but off their rockers allowing an occupying army to just walk right in and take over without destroying any landmarks, museums, landmarks or human lives. When Congress refused to grant his request the General would tell the press that their objections always seemed "a little absurd to me."

Even as the CIA pursued its own experiments with psychochemical espionage the army had formed its Chemical Corps in the late 40's and 50's to investigate possibilities such as the one mentioned above. Experiments with psychoactive substances were conducted on mental inmates and "volunteers" drawn from ranks of military enlisted men at State hospitals and army bases like the Aberdeen Proving Ground in Maryland and Fort Benning in Georgia. These ethically questionable studies were conducted by people such as Dr. Paul Hoch who would become the Director for Hygiene in New York State. Hoch was noted for performing such research on human subjects as administering LSD on patients and then performing lobotomies on them to observe the effect on behavior. He was recorded as saying "certain amount of brain damage can be of therapeutic value. (2) He even would have patients on hallucinogens orally describe what they were seeing while he cut out chunks of their mind with his patients on local anesthesia.

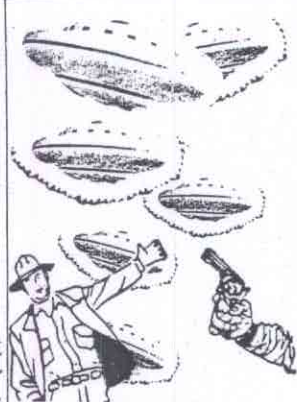

Dr. Van Sim of the Edgewood Arsenal would experiment on himself and tried the drug BZ (quinclidinyl benzilate) necessitating someone following around with a mattress for whenever he fell down for days afterwards (BZ was the drug which the film Jacob's Ladder was loosely based on). Such experiments were continued until 1975. (JD)

49. PREVIOUS PRESIDENTS

Before Washington? Yes! Think about it! When did George "the Hempster" Washington take office? 1789. That's a full thirteen years after the Declaration of Independence was signed (on the fourth of July, in case you forgot), declaring the United States of America. The Continental Congresses of that period were the "governing" body of the interim, and there was not much in the way of laws enacted then. You will then remember that the foundation of what later became our Constitution was assembled--the Articles of Confederation. That was in 1781. Although there were presiding officials, there was no one elected to an office called "president" between the time of the signing of the Declaration and the enacting of the Articles. But on November 5, 1781, one John "Swede" Hanson was elected president. Again, remember, the country you are now living in was formally called the United States of America back on July 4, 1776. This indeed makes John Hanson the true first president of our country. Between that time and when George Washington was elected in 1789, there were six more presidents. The second was Elias Boudinot of New Jersey, second director of the U.S. Mint, and founder of the American Bible Society. The third was Thomas Mifflin, governor of Pennsylvania and during the war Washington's Aide-de Camp. The fourth was none other than Richard Henry Lee, uncle of General Robert E. Lee, and brother of "Lighthorse Harry" Lee. The fifth was Nathaniel Gorham, Boston merchant and politico. Sixth was Arthur St. Clair, first governor of the Northwest Territory. The seventh president of the U.S. was one Cyrus Griffin, of Virginia, who was one of the masterminds behind our judicial courts system. And guess what? All were High-Ranking Freemasons! Surprise! 6-10-47
Douglas, AZ
Coral Lorenzen - author
This is not the first UFO Coral has seen. One flew by in Wis-consin when she was nine. Her encounter at Douglas - two weeks prior to Kenneth Arnold's famous sighting - stuns her. Coral gets into gear and starts the Aerial Phenomena Research Organization (APRO). Her partner is hubby Jim Lorenzen, Senior Technical Associate at The Kitt Peak National Observatory.

6-34-47
Mt. Rainier, WA
Kenneth Arnold - pilot
Often noted as the first "modern" encounter, Arnold sees nine wierd what-cha-ma-call-it. Because he is an expert pilot, he uses his position, heading/bearing and ground features to accurately clock their speed: 1656.7 mph. He says, "they fly like a saucer would if you were to skip it across the water." Thus Arnold coins the term "saucer." The press goes ape-shit.
(see 1962)

Project Sign
Air Force, USA
Air Force opens Project Sign to face wave of hysterical concern over these serie "flying saucers" described by Arnold and an increasing number of witnesses. The press loves it. Soon "saucers," "cigars," "hubcaps," "torpedoes," "bullets," "dimes" abound...

1-7-48
Ft. Knox, KY
Capt. Tom Mantell - pilot AFG
"It's going up now and forward as fast as I am...360 mph. I'm going up to 20,000 feet, and if I'm no closer, I'll abandon chase." These are Mantell's last words. Hours later his body and plane are found in a twisted crash site near Ft. Knox. He and 3 other F51 Mustangs had been on approach at Godman AFB, when the UFO passed overhead. It was witnessed by several civilians and military personnel. The 4 Mustangs were ordered to scramble and give chase. One pilot says, "the thing looks metallic and of tremendous size." Another pilot radios, "It looks tear drop shaped and is fluid." Two pilots turn tail. Mantell peels off alone to meet his doom. By the way, hundreds of Kentuckians see this monster hovering through nearby Madisonville, and later, thousands breathlessly report same. State Police park in numbers and gawk. They report it to be "at least 250 feet in diameter."

10-1-48
 Fargo, ND
Lt. George Gorman - pilot AFG
According to Project Sign reports, Gorman has "a 27 minute chase with flying saucer in the skies over Fargo." Gorman describes it as "about 6 to 8 inches in diameter, clear white and completely round." L. D. Jensen, air traffic controller at Fargo, watches through binoculars. Gorman is "convinced there was thought behind the maneuvers" of this craft.

4-24-49
White Sands, NM
Charles Moore - GM engineer
During a balloon launch Moore and 4 military men observe a gleaming white ellipsoid 2.5 times longer than wide. As confirmed by Navy Cmdr. R. B. McLaughlin, it was giving the balloon chase. The five - experts in ballooning - are sure they didn't just see a weather balloon.

6-10-49
White Sands, NM
Launch Crew
A missile roars into the sky at The White Sands Test Site - all eyes turn upward - suddenly the missile has company. Two saucers run circles around the missile, pass through its exhaust and peel up and out of sight. The crew is flabbergasted; the missile is doing a mean 1430 mph. But not believing their eyes is not an option. There are five separate tracking posts each manned by several men in different locales and linked to the launch site but not to each other. All five demand to know if there is anything in the sky with the rocket. Five screens are showing the oddest blips these technicians have ever seen.

White Sands, NM
4-27-50 : UFO is filmed hovering over a crashed missile... 8-29-50 : Two UFOs are filmed during 2000+ mph. 7-14-51 : Several UFOs are filmed, spotted and radar-tracked during one test of the F86. This kind of hassling continues through a busy decade in aviation's evolution from propeller to jet to ballistic phases. Coincidentally, UFOs are constant companions The White Sands Test Site.

Donald Keyhoe - author
Reprinted from Saucer People, 1992
Kitchens Sink by Jamie Riebel: "In January, 1950, Donald Keyhoe (1897-1988) became a focal point of the UFO phenomenon when he accused The US Government of conspiring to cover-up vital information on flying saucers. In his article, Flying Saucers are Real, published in True magazine, Keyhoe claimed that The Government feared panic if the truth about UFOs were known. A naval Academy graduate and Marine Corps Major, Keyhoe toured with Charles Lindbergh and served as information chief of what later became the FAA. He wrote several books on UFOs; Flying Saucers are Real (1950); Flying Saucers from Outer Space (1953); and The Flying Saucer Conspiracy (1955). In 1957, he became head of the newly formed National Investigations Committee on Aerial Phenomena (NICAP). In 1958, Keyhoe appeared on a CBS TV program about UFOs. The lone UFO supporter, he was exasperated with the heavy editing done to his script by Air Force officials. When he began to disclose information not cleared by The Air Force his voice was cut off the air, supposedly for reasons of national security." (see 1973)

Northern Mexico
"Immediate High Alert for Flying Saucers," declares The Pentagon. A saucer's blip appears on Washington State radar. A group of F94 fighters spot it over Texas. It takes a drastic near right angle and augers in across the border. The pilots mustn't invade Mexico air, so two aviators quickly borrow a light plane to check the crash. By the time they fly in Mexican troops have encircled the wreck. Unable to reach the saucer, one aviator sneaks a fragment of its hull. It is said that US agents recover the debris and also a corpse. No records remain except the "High Alert."

The Capitol, WDC
Harry Barnes - sr. controller
There is a phenomenal wave of sightings over DC. Says Barnes, "During the next 14 minutes, Capt. C. S. Pierman reported that he saw six such lights...each sighting coincided with a pip we could see near his plane." Several airliners - passengers and crew - have same experience. On 7-26-52 two F94s are scrambled to observe the UFOs and spend the entire night playing cat-and-mouse in a series of sorties. Project Blue Book records 336 sightings on this night alone.

Virginia
Navy Cmdr. Alvin Moore
Moore finds a bluish stone cylinder 5.25" thick. There had been a DC3 that had reported a UFO nearby - and the DC3's flight path had crossed Moore's property. Moore contacts The National Bureau of Standards, who can not identify it. Moore sends it to Project Blue Book, who say, "it's basic slag from an open hearth furnace." Later, Moore - working at CIA, Langley, VA - keeps his thing-a-ma-bob in his office safe. A fellow spook rips it off.

Miami, FL
Ralph Mayher - photographer
Mayher films saucer in 16mm while off-duty from Marines. He reports the news at base. Consequently, Naval Intelligence orders him to relinquish the film and camera. Mayher obtains a copy. The original goes into the hands of Pentagon brass via Major William Frazier of AFL never to go public again. A 1953 analysis of Mayher's copy - by Physics Professor Clarence Rainwater - reveals its velocity to reach 7550 mph. (see 11-7-57)

East China Sea, Okinawa, Japan
Maj. Rudy Pestalozzi - AF1
Pestalozzi listens to 3 pilots' account of the tragic crash: four F86D Sabres are making their final approach to Okinawa, returning from a practice bombing run. The low clouds require the four to fly at 1500 feet skimming under this ceiling a half mile apart. Suddenly, a gigantic saucer drops through the clouds in the path of the lead jet. It is a luminous orb with a brightly lit red dome canopy on its leading rim. There is a terrific explosion as the first sabre smacks into the saucer's canopy. The 3 following sabres veer to miss the fireball. The saucer survives without a nick, hovers and then jumps back into the clouds. Maj. Pestalozzi includes this account in his report to his commander. His report, though, disappears - just like nothing happened.

Levelland, TX
Pedro Saucedo - laborer
Saucedo is driving alone when a huge "torpedo" lands in a field along the road. Saucedo stops to gawk. It rises slowly and heads right for him. The do-hicky roars overhead killing his truck's engine and headlights. The truck vibrates violently until it passes. Then his lights cut on again. Frenzied, he calls the cops who tell him to sleep it off. Then another call comes in. Jim Wheeler on the other side of town sees the thing blocking his way out of town. And his car is stalled too. The cops pile into their cars and hurry toward the site of Wheeler's encounter. The sheriff and his officers - five Texas lawmen - witness the craft high over Levelland. Blue Book releases its explanation: "ball-lightening!" But only kooks believe in ball-lightening!

Ralph Mayher receives visit from 2 officers from CIA who collect the film copy he owns of a UFO. And apparently unable to script the Pentagon original, they swipe Mayher's copy - never to return key footage. The Freedom of Information Act prompts a lawsuit to obtain the CIA to surrender Mayher's film, but in the process it is revealed that it was under top level study. The film is still forbidden. Mayher later becomes ABC TV's Chief Cameraman. (see 7-29-52)

The Condon Report
Dr. Edward Condon
Condon (1902-1974) is a noted Physicist and teacher. His resume includes two of The US's highest priority top secret military-science projects: radar and the atomic bomb. In 1966 Condon releases his report done for The Air Force on UFOs. He completely discredits UFOs in his biased report, often dismissing obvious certainties such as prevailing weather, corroborated eye-witness accounts, scientifically collected data and photographic evidence.

Cuban Air Space
Saucers were at war with Cuba - or one assumes. A saucer blasts a Cuban with an incredibly powerful beam one spring day. The Cuban is piloting a MIG21 and by order is arming to destroy the bogie. Zooming in to kill, the Mig gets it instead. The other pilot in the formation watches the rowdy disintegration and totally loses his nerve. Cuban controllers struggle to talk the hysterical pilot to a landing. But he is not alone in bearing witness. The National Security Agency listening post at Boca Chica, FL monitors the entire engagement.

Operation Lure
Maj. Donald Keyhoe
Keyhoe outlines his plan to establish contact with space aliens, but it is just so dubious I wonder if Don wasn't a few bricks shy of a load. His early work suffers when you bear this: dummy saucers would be built to attract the passing ETs to land. Distant cameras record the visit. Inside the aliens are shown an animated film that communicates our peaceful desire to meet...Goofy asks ET to chat over martinis.

Colorado & New Mexico
Ranch Animals

What does Colorado have in common with New Mexico? Beside hosting Dr. Condon - The USAF official UFO debunker and covert investigator - Colorado and New Mexico host hundreds of animal mutilations from 1974-75. The hapless ranch animals often lay slain in berds and coincidentally in close proximity to nuclear arms facilities in both states. Extreme cases belie little by way of how or why ranchers lose stock. The mutilation Modus operandi - animals are slain en masse; blood is drained; internal and external organs are removed, including: eyes, ears, tongues, mammarys, intestines, glands and sex organs; no trace of blood, epidermis or interns is recovered. This classic wave of mutilations is persistent legend, folks, so don't ask me whodunnit.

Northern US
Strategic Air Command
The LA concludes, "No cause for the sightings [is] determined...but...[they] demonstrate a clear intent to disrupt nuclear weapons capabilities." At Long AFB, UFOs swarm the SAC B52s in operation and at rest. Loring - on Presque Isle, ME - is first; soon SAC is beset by hassling UFOs from Maine to Montana on three nerve-wracking days. No part of the US nuclear delivery and storage system escapes the distracting flurry: missile silos, B52 pads, B52s flying readiness, command facilities, weapons facilities and radar defenses were compromised by the UFO activity. Radar and eye-witness accounts concur. Helicopters, F106s and Sabotage Alert Teams fail to repel the massively concentrated, selective and unidentified pests. At Lima-One, near Harlowtown, MT, a UFO hovered 10 feet above a silo. Numerous cattle mutilations follow this activity.

Apache-Sitgraves Forest, AZ
Travis Walton
Do you recall the ETs of yore? Cute, cosmic and kind? Nowadays, ETs snatch you, ream you and do a bit of rough-shod dentistry. They chase Earthlings with serrated dildos and novocaine syringes. Well, thank Travis Walton for the transformation. "The trickery, subterfuge and outright falsehoods used...in dealing with the US Forest Service...convinced me that he would not hesitate to resort to a UFO-abduction hoax if it would serve his needs," Phillip Klass. No reference to Walton's USFS contract is made in the movie version of his story, Fire in The Sky. What movie-goers miss is this drab contractual agreement that motivates the motley loggers. The contract stipulates loggers have over 300 acres of forest to clear by the night Walton is capped by BEMs. Only an Act of God clause in their contract stood between them and the return of their $2,500 deposit placed with The USFS as a retainer. Coincidentally, The UFO Incident premiered on NBC less than two weeks prior the due date/abduction. This was the Betty Hill abduction story. You don't suppose Walton was watching TV instead of felling trees, do you?

Woodbridge, ENG
Cmdr. Gen. Gordon Williams
In 1983, a USAF official report is released to the public. USAF Security Police at a Joint US-UK AFB go to investigate an apparent plane crash in Rendlesham Forest, nearby Woodbridge AFB. Once there, police behold a triangular metal craft hovering under the trees. It shoots away. Then a larger craft is discovered. By this time the brass arrive to intercept loggers. The US and UK aviators stand in awe as several 3-foot tall beings busy about the large vehical suspended on beams of light. Cmdr. Gen. Williams orders film crews in to record the event. Thirty minutes elapse; meanwhile, Williams greets and establishes communication with several beings. The aliens board their craft, and in a flashing cold blast the ship disappears. Soon, the horizon is ablaze in colorful lights. Cmdr. Gen. Williams uses his own discretion to reveal this case in public.

52. GERONIMO PRATT

Geronimo Ji Jaga (Pratt) has spent 21 long years rotting in California Prisons, nearly a world-record for a political prisoner. A generation ago, he was part of The Black Panther Party's cooperative leadership, and this inspired FBI harassment which climaxed in a frame-up for a murder that Pratt could have not possibly committed...it's questionable that he was morally capable...it's not a matter of question that he was not physically capable...Pratt was 400 miles away when the murder was committed. COINTELPRO. The FBI's counter intelligence program, railroaded Pratt.

Though intense surveillance recorded his every move for a period of years - the records concerning the one-to-two days necessary to drive all the way to Santa Monica where the murder occurred and get back to Oakland as the prosecution claimed were lost. Oops!

And check this out, Julio Butler a "moderate" Panther responsible for the testimony crucial to the court's guilty verdict; Butler was a paid FBI mole. During Pratt's trial, Butler's "prejudicial status" was not only ruled "inadmissible" it was deliberately covered-up by LA Courthouse officialdom. Butler's role in hanging Pratt for the pigs accidentally rose to public attention with the Freedom of Information Act when interested parties stumbled on Butler's surveillance. (CS)

53. PLANET GODZILLA

ROAAAARR!!! A flash of radioactive fire and half of Tokyo burns from here to the horizon. Not the A-bomb, but Godzilla back again to reap atomic vengeance. Sure, I like those campy movies with rubber-suited guys beating the bejesus out of each other and pretending to be monsters, you say. Did it ever occur to you that there was something more sinister afoot with those "kiddie films"? Filth's intrepid man in Japan whom we shall call Saki to protect him from the government, has confirmed our worst fears. Saki reports that while on a routine Yakuza shakedown of Toho studios, he uncovered several classified government documents. Not only do these papers affirm the reports of a tenth planet discovered in our solar system - called Planet X - but they also show conclusive evidence that those "kiddie films" are actually documentaries. Godzilla is in truth, a creation of the Japanese Government in association with the Allied Powers from World War Two, forged in Atomic fire from the "unnecessary" bombing of Nagasaki. The intention was that the creature would be used as a last-ditch effort to defend the Earth from space invasion. However, the cabal of Powers bit off more than they can chew, as the monster has run amok several times. True, as it has been shown, when the X-ists sent Monster Zero to attack Earth - what better place to attack than the most powerful economic center of the world, Japan - the monster did perform it's function, but Filth's resident zoologist contends that it was only a typical reptilian territorial response. While most of the documents we received packed inside a Sony portable stereo were damaged by a mysterious battery malfunction, the remaining evidence of a cover-up is clear. The producers of the Godzilla series of films were given a choice of either camping up the later films or lengthy prison terms (or even death). Saki, now afraid for his life, has fled to Monster Island and can no longer be reached. (MF & RG)

54. COCAINE COWBOYS

In the 1980's, our borders were literally flooded with cocaine. Apparently, President Reagan's war on drugs had little effect on the deluge of white powder pouring in from the south. Nancy's "Just Say No" song must have been the biggest joke in South America, not to mention to our own CIA. The U.S. government has spent more than $100 billion of our tax money to supposedly stop the flow of drugs, while simultaneously protecting the biggest offenders and allowing the drugs to seep through our borders in the covert war against Communism. So that under the guise of drug enforcement, the CIA funded the Contras with cocaine and the DEA along with local law enforcement put the drug's lesser street peddlers behind bars. You couldn't ask for a better conspiracy to keep the underclass in the USA down, and addicted while managing to create an army of CIA trained militia to fight the evil Communism abroad.

The book Cocaine Politics by Peter Dale Scott and Jonathan Marshall, 1991, University of California Press, gives an excellent investigation into the CIA's role in Central America, and the role that drugs played in it all.

The Big White Lie by ex-DEA agent Michael Levine (1993, Thunder's Mouth Press) offers a personal account of the author's experiences as an undercover DEA agent, and how his efforts to bust known cocaine kingpins were thwarted by the very agency that hired him. Levine describes how by doing his job, he was led into a bureaucratic nightmare in which the DEA was trying to prosecute him for petty rule book violations. As Levine worked undercover from Argentina to Tucson, he found out who was responsible for manufacturing, selling, buying, and transporting the mountains of cocaine that were dumped into the streets of the USA. Levine would ask his superiors to search their massive computer system for names he turned up. The DEA's computer system supposedly holds everyone from small time street buyers to known drug lords. More often than not, the computers would turn up blank on the biggest traffickers. People that Levine busted would go free for lack of evidence. Something was not right.

It seemed to Levine that the harder he worked to actually bust the cocaine empire, the more trouble he got from his superiors. It became clear that "the Drug War Machine" would eat him alive in some kind of Kafka-esque nightmare of bureaucratic bullshit unless he simply failed to do his job.

Levine believed with a patriotic fervor in the war on drugs. That is, as a DEA agent, he believed that the war on drugs was supposed to stop the flow of drugs from consuming this country. Drugs had consumed his brother, who committed suicide after a 15-year heroin habit. And drugs had killed his son, who was a narcotics officer and was shot to death while raiding a crack house in New York City. Instead of prosecuting drug dealers and big time traffickers, the war on drugs was kicking him around. They sent him on an undercover assignment in Arizona in which he was supposed to nail the top cocaine traffickers to the wall. He was set up to work with the former "Queen of Cocaine", a mysterious Bolivian who had connections to the DEA now as an informer. Well, the DEA set them up with low grade cocaine...how are you supposed to lure drug dealing professionals into your trap with moldy cut-rate cocaine? According to Levine, the U.S. government has warehouses full of the best quality pure cocaine there is (left over from previous busts). Why would they spend so much energy setting up Levine and the mysterious Queen of Cocaine with a state of the art surveillance house, and a plane load of bad coke? When he probed his superiors for answers to such unprofessional actions, they evaded his questions.

Who were they (the DEA, the USA) trying to protect? Certainly not Levine, the undercover man. His bosses made vague references to "problems with the Agency"...blah blah blah. Meaning that the CIA and the DEA were at cross purposes, somehow. Levine proves that the CIA engineered the "Cocaine Coup" in Bolivia in 1980, allowing right wing fascists to take over that country, while making cocaine legal. Like many South American countries, Bolivia needed the cocaine trade to feed their starving people. By working with the CIA, they were allowed to deal coke (and flood the U.S. with it) as long as the government was run by the right wing. Once again, the war against communism takes precedence over human rights and powerfully addicting drugs. I remember in the late 70s people telling me that cocaine wasn't addictive, nor was it physically harmful. My how times have changed.

The Big White Lie is a gripping read. As Levine states in the introduction, "I will give you a fly on the wall look at how the CIA perverts the American justice system by protecting drug dealers and murderers from prosecution..." (p.4) The war on drugs is a lie, and this is not news. But I can't help but be fascinated by Levine's first hand account of his efforts to believe and work for the lie until it nearly consumed him and he had to face the real truth behind the never ending blizzards of cocaine sweeping our country.

56. JACK THE RIPPERS

In 1976 there was a book published of an author by the name of Stephen Knight. The book was called Jack the Ripper, the Final Solution; in it Knight compiles some interesting facts and associated information which suggest that the murders attributed to Jack the Ripper may not have been the work of a single man, but a killing campaign started by the powerful and influential Freemasons of the day.

There are several details that are connected to the killings that when looked at in the light of Masonic Rituals are strangely similar. For instance: the five slayings allegedly committed by Jack the Ripper were performed identically to that of the Masonic initiation rite in which the initiate "mimes" the penalties he shall pay if the oaths of the order are betrayed. Specifically that of "Entered Apprentice", which like all the murders, was accomplished by a left-to-right cut across the throat.

There is only precise information on three of the five victims of the Ripper. The second and fourth of whose deaths there are graphic inquest reports, included the removal of the intestines and the placement of them over the victims shoulder. This is again almost exactly in accordance with the protocols of the Freemasons in dealing with their traitorous own: "...by the breast being torn open and the heart and vitals taken out and thrown over the left shoulder." It was also documented that on the fourth cadaver "A triangular flap of skin had been reflected from each cheek..." The sacred symbol of Masonry is comprised of two triangles.

One of the victims, Marie Kelly, was found in a grisly state that closely resembles an engraving by William Hogarth, one of the first persons to expose Masonic practices. The particular engraving "The Reward of Cruelty" depicts the various mutilations of a person by their Masonic killers. The symbolic wounds and placement of organs and limbs in various positions matches perfectly the condition of Kelly's body when it was found.

Some other interesting facts include the message scrawled in a passage where a piece of a victims clothes was found. The message was: The Jewes are The men That Will not be Blamed for nothing. The "Jewes" always thought to be a misspelling of "Jews" is actually the three apprentice Masons who killed master builder Hiram Abif in Masonic lore. And the location of the last murder is of particular significance, Mitre Square. Surely a bad choice for the average criminal due to its openness and exposure to the passersby, but Mitre Square happens to be the second most important Masonic site in London, after the Great Hall of the Grand Lodge.

Finally, Knight relates a story by one Joseph Sickert told to him by his late father Walter Sickert that might be the motive behind these odd coincidences. Walter Sickert was a famous English painter and was a friend of Prince Eddy, son of Prince Albert and heir to the throne at the time of the slayings. Sickert had kept a studio at 22 Cleveland Street where an Anne Elizabeth Crook worked along with Marie Kelly, the Rippers last victim. Apparently here Prince Eddy met Crook, a Roman Catholic (then a despised minority), and they became romantically involved; they were married in a secret ceremony and eventually a child was born. After a police raid in the area both the Prince and Crook were arrested, and while Prince Eddy was released, Anne Crook was placed in institutions and workhouses until her death in 1920. Marie Kelly allegedly fled with the child and hid in a convent.

Knight says that the reason behind the Ripper murders was that Marie Kelly and three associates tried to betray the throne by exposing the marriage and the birth of the child, essentially royal blackmail. The man appointed to "clear up these matters" was Sir William Gull, Physician Ordinary to Queen Victoria, who had previously signed the certificate declaring Anne Elizabeth Crook insane. Gull was a high level Freemason and his Masonic vows dictated an additional responsibility to dealing with the threat. Because any threat to the royal throne was seen as a threat to Freemasonry who at the time was the secret power behind the British throne. If one fell, which was increasingly possible at the time, then the Masons may be soon to follow. So it was Gull, who's Masonic connections and loyalty to the Queen, that may have been behind the brutal slayings of Jack the Ripper(s).

57. COMPOUND FRACTURED

The terrorist bombing of the World Trade Center got you down? Why not take the minds of the public off the fact that even the US is susceptible of terrorist attacks (besides catching and implicating the terrorists immediately...). How about a timely storm trooping of a well armed cult, headed by an ex-rocker, who believes that he is the "Messenger" from God, and that the world was coming to an end, and that when he "reveals" himself, the riots in LA would pale in comparison...(paraphrased from the affi-"davit"-pun intended, US District Court Western).

The ATF raid on Mount Carmel (often referred to as Waco) would have happened sooner or later, getting wise to the fact that that a mailing address called "Mag-Bag" (aka "the Compound") was getting tons of C.O.D. UPS

58. YEAR THE CARPENTERS BROKE

Or, how the Woodstock generation stopped tripping and became the Pepsi Generation. The year was 1971 and Pot Smoking Republicans everywhere were grooving on One Toke Over The Line and Eight Miles High. The Nixon Administration, which was planning the suspension of the Constitution in its second term, had the FCC issue a notice requiring radio stations to screen all records for "language tending to promote or glorify drug use." Not censorship, really, more like mind control.

The Car Stereo Revolution was in its infancy, so the sole provider of driving music for most was the AM signal.

The result, as they say, was devastating. Groups like The Association and Tony Orlando & Dawn came to dominate the lives of millions; their soothing, giddy pop music virtually impossible to escape. These songs declared with sincere idiocy that problems such as unemployment, urban decay, war, and racism were simply to large and unanswerable.

In the end, the social experiment worked. Hippy radicals, too weak for the insidious torture of early seventies rock, were driven to use far more dangerous drugs than pot. They snapped. Many of these unfortunates today congregate at Civic Center Plaza in San Francisco or on Telegraph in Berkeley. Others dwell in darkened cellars, endlessly mumbling the lyrics to songs such as "Charish" and "Close To You". President Jimmy Carter formed the SSI pilot plan to aid this miserable lot.

Later on, he combined effects of Disco and Cocaine quieted the remaining pseudo-enlightened elements and made Ronald Reagan an easy sell to the sugar-smacked crowd. (RC)

59. WHEN THE MOON RANG

If we never went to the Moon, why did it ring after we landed on it? According to the Book of Lists, the Moon rang for several months after the lunar module landed on it. Since the Moon is a perfect sphere, the lunar module struck the Moon like a bell when it touched down onto the Moon's dusty surface causing it to vibrate for some time. We didn't hear it ring since space is a vacuum, but NASA detected vibrations similar to that of a bell when struck emanating from the Moon after every Apollo lunar module landed on it. (LL)

60. CAR JACKIE

Abraham Zapruder's footage was recently included in the movie JFK. The JFK version has been edited, and it suffers from the transformation onto tape. Single frames published in Life Magazine show better detail and coverage, but the choice of frames is peculiar. None of the Life frames show the president's gory head wound. In the JFK version, the fatal shot is cropped tightly around the president. A dramatic argument for conspiracy is made from the close up of the president's head and the direction the president recoiled. The close cropping focuses attention on the president, but it draws attention away from the other passengers.

The president rode through the outskirts of Dallas shortly after noon. The president waved. There was one shot and another. Then the president's head explodes. The right side of his skull shatters into fragments. A piece of his brain lands on the trunk of the Lincoln. Two motorcycle policemen riding behind the president and to the left were splattered with blood.

His attractive wife Jackie sat in the back seat as far away from her husband as possible. The president's secret romances were being noticed in newspaper columns and TV talk shows.

Jackie's mascara was unfashionably heavy, and she looked a bit ghoulish. After the president is first hit, he leans toward Jackie as if to duck. She twists in her seat, and she grasps her husband's left forearm with her left hand. The president's right hand moves to his throat. Then it moves toward Jackie's left hand, as if to push it out of his way. As the president leaned farther, Jackie places her right hand on his left shoulder. The president's right hand moves back to his throat. Bravely she holds him up. The president poses like the leaning tower of Pisa while the fatal bullet explodes the right side of his skull. The president's body twists to his left, and it recoils back to the rear of the limousine.

Jackie lets go of the lifeless corpse. She climbs onto the seat back, and she looks straight into the camera. She raises her hand to her face. Then she lowers it as if she is blowing a kiss to someone. Her lips are open and rounded in a big O. She crawls out on the trunk to retrieve the splattered brain tissue.

Jackie mourned her husband for a discrete period. Then she married an even wealthier Greek man named Aristotle Onassis. (CL)

62. US UBER ALLES

It is held among the politically naive that the second world war was a clear cut conflict between good and evil, freedom and tyranny, unlike the multitude of regional struggles, "police actions" or guerrilla wars that have occurred since. The victors have written, pontificated and broadcast that Hitler was evil, that those who fought and defeated him were good and that the resulting world order that emerged, while not perfect, was at least a vindication of the values of those that defeated him. But as Studs Terkel notes with his ironic quotation marks on the title of his oral history of the second "Big One", The Good War, nothing is ever really that simple. For instance, the role of the victor's before and after WWII could bear some stronger scrutiny.

When the German Reich succeeded the Weimar Republic, American corporations were some of its strongest backers. For instance Opel AG, the German auto manufacturer, was 80% owned by General Motors. Through Opel GM's controlling shareholders, the duPonts, made $36 million in the decade before the war. When Hitler came to power and placed a prohibition on the export of German capital GM ended up investing $20 million back into companies owned by National Socialist officials.

Standard Oil did its part to help the Nazis overcome a significant logistic set back in the march toward world conquest. In 1934 Germany still imported the vast majority of its fossil fuels and if a war had then occurred a simple embargo would have stopped the Nazi war machine. This problem was side stepped by the development of a tetraethyl-lead and gasoline synthetic fuel by Standard working with the German chemical company I.G. Farben, allowing Germany to use its regional coal deposits to fuel its tanks.

Henry Ford, who was antisemitic, militantly anti-communist and one of Hitler's heroes, maintained membership in the War Production Board, a committee which received contributions from the German Government to disseminate propaganda urging American voters to abstain from any involvement in European conflict. When France was occupied with German troops, Ford continued to operate his factories there to provide trucks for the German Army. Hitler even awarded the American entrepreneur the Grand Cross of the German Eagle in the 30's.

The sort of "grayness" that occurs when big business intersects with big war can be displayed by the behavior of ITT (International, Telephone and Telegraph), which owned stock in German armament companies. ITT continued to do business with the German government even after Pearl Harbor, providing the Germans with the ingredients for their rocket bombs, high frequency radio sets and other such matters.

At the conclusion of the war, and going against the agreements of the Yalta Conference made between the Allied Powers, certain members of the American military intelligence agencies employed the war criminal Reinhard Gehlen as the head of a network of spies to monitor the Soviet Union. Gehlen who realized that Hitler would most likely lose the war as early as 1944, took his comprehensive documentation of the Soviet Union (obtained through the interrogation and torture of countless Soviet P.O.W.'s) microfilmed and buried it in the Alps to use as a bargaining tool to gain his freedom from the Americans (who he felt wouldn't execute him on the spot as the Russians would). Being able to win the support of such notables as General Edwin Sibert and Walter Bedell Smith, who was Supreme Allied Commander, Gehlen not only escaped justice but was provided with the means to set up the Gehlen Organization in Bavaria which remained a constant source of information regarding the Eastern Bloc for NATO and incidentally, the means through which other war criminals such as Klaus Barbie escaped Europe to take refuge in friendly South American dictatorships. Utilizing the transportation and fake visa resources provided him by the US military, Gehlen was able to set up what were termed "rat lines" to smuggle his friends and former coworkers in the human extermination business away from the people who wanted them hanged. ### SIGHTINGS IN THE BIBLE; GOD IS NOT OF THIS EARTH!

Jesus was an Alien, sent to Earth as to study humans (like Jean Luc Beccard). The Star of Bethlehem was his spaceship, and the light shining down on the manger was a transporter beam on Star Trek. Accidentally "found out" that he was different, he was then worshiped as a special person, violating The Prime Directive.

"Let it be so" - Jean "JC" Luc Beccard to Num. 1, episode 3.

He took on the persona of a Rock God, got jaded and started balling hookers, turning the ancient world into drinking heavily, turning water into wine. The people thought he was way cool.

The Romans got Jealous; they were the ones who were saying that they were Gods incarnate. He was raining on their parade. They put him high on some sticks, trying to get the attention of his ship so they could take him back. Other proof is Ezechiel/Data, when he looked up at God and saw a burning Charlot Wheel...the disk part of the Starship Enterprise, going into warp drive. (sources; Planet Zero) (SMM)

66. PROJECT ARGUS

Around 1958, the significant implications of the Earth's magnetic fields and radiation belts for future military activities were what drew the attention of government physicists. Nicholas Christofilos, a physicist working at the University of California's Livermore Radiation Laboratory, developed techniques to harness and control the energy released in hydrogen fusion reactions. Christofilos used magnetic confinement fields. When the Soviets launched Sputnik I, Christofilos decided that the earth's magnetic field could be used to contain an artificial band of relativistic electrons. He speculated that this artificial radiation belt could be made intense enough to destroy satellites in orbit. The belt would produce worldwide radio noise on the HF and VHF radio bands that carried the bulk of military communications. By accurately calculating the site for an explosion of a nuclear device, its effects could be made to occur over a specific target area. Christofilos urged that the government test his postulates by exploding a nuclear device in space. Christofilos superiors at Livermore placed his papers under top security control and advised the President's Science Advisory group of the matter. The resulting program became Project Argus.

67. LaROUCHE!!

Lyndon Hermyle LaRouche Jr. is the chameleon of conspiracies. A brief look at his life before the big house reveals his ability to expose conspiracies (true or not), create conspiracies, participate in conspiracies and finally look like the victim of a conspiracy, against himself. His allegiances varied greatly over the years. On his return from WWII he claimed to be a Marxist but was quickly digusted with it and by the late 60's had started his own group. In 1973 his small following started "Operation Mop-Up", baseball-bat attacks against members of the more traditional left. They were responsible for more than seventy raids on the American Communist Party and the Socialist Workers Party (whom LaRouche himself had been a member of for fifteen years). This pretty much cemented his ostrasization from the left and his writings and speeches in the mid-70's could easily be said to complete his swing to the extreme right. But even when it was only himself that claimed to have all the answers; it was still hard to distinguish where LaRouche hung his hat. He holds the left-right distinctions in contempt and has said "I don't believe the seating arrangements of the French National Assembly of 1793 have permentaly frozen politics until the end of time."

LaRouche belives his politics are philisophical in nature, based on an early interest in German philosopher Immanuel Kant. Kant's "moral imperitives" and LaRouches obsession with technology made for strange ideological bedfellows. LaRouche sees technocracy as the proper goal of global politics; where through rationality there is technology and finally advanced morality, hence technological progress equals moral action. In this tecnopia there is no "survival of the fittest" so what LaRouche calls "neo-Malthusianism" is quickly discounted; as is the British economist Thomas Malthus who coined the term that would later be appropriated by Darwin. Contained in this dogma is LaRouches support for the SDI's beam weapons, all nuclear power and the idea he introduced on his forth campaign for president in 1988, his plan for colonizing Mars.

LaRouche sees most of his detractors as "irrational hedonists" the majority of them from the past and present of British intelligentsia. The latest exponent being Henry Kissinger, whom LaRouche belives is simply a British agent for Cbatham House or officially the Royal Institute of International Affairs. LaRouche traces the "irrationalist" conspiracy's British roots back to fourteenth-century Scottish King Robert Bruce, father of Scottish Freemasonry, all the way up to the Queen of England controlling the worlds opium trade. These and other dark tales are but a small part of the vast plot that Lyndon LaRouche, once armed with his own counter-conspiracy, now belives he is paying for.

At his strongest LaRouche had a modest following, including overseas members. He had a network of at least sixteen political organisations and twelve publications, two of which gained some measure of respect and even a software company. His private intelligence organisation rivaled that of the official intelligence community. But somewhere along the line he must of stepped on the wrong toes. The government took LaRouche to court to get his financial-political machine that preyed on the well-to-do elderly to bankroll his aspirations. It would eventually end in a mistrial, but LaRouche suspected a conspiracy to discredit him that originated at the highest levels of the government. His defence team turned up documents to verify that the government had placed infiltrators deep in LaRouche's organisation. There was even an internal memo between Richard Secord and Ollie North that discussed the surveillance of LaRouche. There was a theory amongst his lawyers that maybe LaRouche and North were both trying to tap the pockets of the same private citizen to fund their separate objectives. But LaRouche knew better, he had no doubt as to the source of his problems, he was set up by his personal nemesis Henry Kissinger.

Amongst the things that may have contributed to this retribution is a leaflet penned by LaRouche entitled "Kissinger: The Politics of Faggotry" which was passed along to Henry by his pal, then director of the FBI, William Webster. Kissinger wrote Webster to "see what he could do" and presumably this is when the FBI started its "Get LaRouche" campaign. This and LaRouche's opposition to the Nicaraguan contra war, his trying his hand at Middle-Eastern diplomacy again at Kissingers expence and being the thorn in the side of more than one American president may also have helped. These are tame compared to some of Lyndon's stranger postulates. He has claimed that the Grateful Dead rather than just a aging, boring rock band, is actually "a British Intelligence operation" (doesn't say much for their intelligence Ed.), accused the canon of New York's Episcopal archdiocese of satanic and homosexual behavior, and strictly forbid masturbation by his followers. He is said to have considered the possibility of assasinating Carter, helped Reagan get elected and had mysterious ties with the CIA and the NSC. Whatever is known or unknown about Lyndon LaRouche at this point is rather useless for at the age of 66 he was put in prison on charges of tax and credit fraud for fifteen years. Love him or hate him he played by his own rules in a very closed game with the biggest of the big boys and ended up in jail for it. So much for "anyone can be president" and by the way what makes Lyndon LaRouche and Ross Perot so different? Maybe we can ask Lyndon when he gets out of jail at the age of 81.

68. CULT of ASSASSINS

"Hassan I Sabbah; what more can we say about the world's first known leader of assassins? When we think of assassins, we usually picture half-crazed, overcoated madmen perched on grassy knolls with high-powered rifles. But, imagine this instead, that you are a poor, brave, Allah fearing, and, most importantly, fanatically desperate soul in the middle ages. You are at the foot of a barely accessible mountain, defended on all sides, where perched like an eagle's nest high in the cradle of craggy peaks, rests a castle where you know heaven is held. Take yourself there. You are guided by sword wielding dervishes through the gilded gates into the home of your host and soon-to-be spiritual master. You are feasted on tropical fruits and rare delicacies as you sip honey wine while Hassan speaks about the nature of heaven. As your eyes begin to close, because you're suddenly drowsy, Hassan has you taken to your quarters where you drift off into unconsciousness.

But Lo! Where is this you awaken unto? Around you lay lush gardens of exotic plants, filled to teeming with cool fountains and high-breasted women who are willing to do whatever you bid. With us so ar? You are shown hours of ecstasy, all whims fulfilled, until at last, you must rest. Suddenly, you awaken, again at the able of your host. The Old Man of the Mountain offers you a bargain, a return to paradise after death if you offer him and Allah your loyalty and service. You agree and join the legions of similar people already recruited in this fashion. Hassan, that wacky Jim Jones of the 11th century is a cult of these people and was widely zared. For you see, The willingness to die or a cause, whether for god or some other lind pointless ideal, not psychosis, marks the mettle of the true assassin. Fearless and well-placed the devotees were everywhere nd death could strike any of Hassan's nemies from king to lowly peasant. (MF : RG)

69. FACE IN SPACE

In 1976, the Viking Orbiters 1 and 2 were sent to Mars. Viking 2 was sent to the surface, while Viking 1 continued to orbit the red planet, snapping thousands of photographs. On orbit 35, from 1000 miles above Mars' surface, the spacecraft photographed the region known as Cydonia. As the photographs streamed into NASA's imaging center, a NASA scientist peered into each one with a magnifying glass. He was looking for an appropriate landing site for the Viking 2 module. His eye caught a strange looking nesa. Strange perhaps for its uniformity. When he looked again, the mesa looked distinctly like a human face carved out of itone. (see photo). Author Richard Hoagland was there as part of the Jet Propulsion Laboratory's (JPL) press corps, along with hundreds of other journalists from around the world. Another project scientist showed the press corps the photo and exclaimed, "Isn't it sculliar what tricks of lighting and shadow can do...When we took a picture a few hours later it all went away; it was just a trick...the way the light fell on it." from The Monuments of Mars by Richard Hoagland, p.5) According to Hoagland, everyone believed the scientist, and that was the end...for a while.

A few years later, Vincent DiPietro and Gregory Molenaar took another look at frame 35A72, the one with the alleged ace. With NASA's super computers, they enhanced the photo to get a better look at it. They concluded that the symmetrical form clearly resembled a face. What would a human face be doing on Mars?

A few years later, Richard Hoagland began studying frame 35A72, and the DiPietro/Molenaar computer enhanced versions of the face. He concluded that not only was there a mile long face carved out of the Martian desert, but the ruins of a city there as well. The prospect of alien viny sitting "right next door" drove Hoagland into 7 years of research. His book, The Monuments of Mars goes into detail about his discovery that the rock formations in frame 35A72 were made by intelligent forces. In other words, because of geometric angles in some of the larger rocks around the Cydonia area, Hoagland deduces that they must have been created by an organized intelligence, than an extraterrestrial civilization once lived on Mars. They left behind some pyramids arranged at specific angles to each other, and a huge human face carved into a mesa. Why does the face look so human? Was it meant to be a message for future Earth generations? Where did 'they' go? The questions are endless. Hoagland explores many possibilities in his book.

In December 1990, a NASA-Lewis Research Center television production called "Hoagland's Mars" was suddenly canceled by direct orders from NASA's headquarters in Washington D.C. The program had been scheduled to air around the country. According to Hoagland, this television program would have been the first in which NASA would officially recognize the Face on Mars, as well as investigate Hoagland's research into the apparent alien ruins on Mars. Hoagland suggests that there is a conspiracy of silence going on; that NASA doesn't want the public to know that there may be the ruins of an ancient alien civilization up there...What, the government's hiding things from us?

On September 25, 1992, the Mars Observer was launched from Cape Canaveral FL. The craft was to lock into Mars' orbit on August 24, 1993. It was to spend the next 687 days, or one Martian year, photographing the red planet from just 234 miles above its surface. The New York Times predicted fabulous pictures. Well, just as the Mars Observer was due to zip into Mars' orbit, NASA lost communication with it. Mysterious, isn't it?

Some have suggested that the extra boost of power needed to propel the Mars observer into Mars' orbit, was a shock to the rocket's circuitry, thus shorting out the computer systems. You'd think they would have tested their equipment extensively for this kind of thing before sending it all the way out there!

There may be unseen forces at play. Some have suggested that on an evolutionary level, we may not be ready to find evidence of an alien civilization on Mars, thereby causing the communication devices on the space craft to fail just when we were supposed to start receiving pictures. Others have suggested that an intelligent force on, or around Mars, blocked communication in some way. Others still, speculate that NASA has indeed received transmissions from the Mars Observer, but that they're hiding it from us. The Viking photographs were taken from 1000 miles above Mars. These photos would have been taken from just 235 miles above the surface. Is it possible the Mars Observer crashed? Or, did it receive something so extraordinary that the government feels compelled to protect the public. Either way, we're in the dark until we regain contact with the Mars Observer, or until someone finds evidence that NASA is somehow covering up the information they've been receiving from the Mars Observer.

Does it matter? Well, since the Mars observer cost more than a billion of our hard earned cash, I'd be relieved to know the truth. It reminds me of when NASA sent that nearsighted Hubble telescope into space. I mean didn't they test it first?

If it matters to you, you can call 1-800-424-0031 for information on how to receive The Mars Mission newsletter, or to order Hoagland's video called Hoagland's Mars vol.2. His book, The Monuments of Mars: A City on the Edge of Forever, North Atlantic Books, Berkeley, Ca.1987 is available here also. (LL)

71. RICHARD CASE NAGEL

The book The Man Who Knew Too Much by Dick Russell, tells the story of CIA agent Richard Case Nagel. In 1963 Nagel was on assignment in Mexico City as a double agent for the Soviet Union. The Soviets gave him instructions to intercept Oswald and dissuade him from participating in the Kennedy assassination. He was to assassinate Oswald if necessary. His CIA superiors promptly disappeared. Nagel traveled to New Orleans where he spoke with Oswald twice. Nagel became fearful that he himself would be implicated in the conspiracy. He sent a registered letter to FBI director J. Edgar Hoover alerting him to the plot. On September 20, 1963 Nagel entered a Bank in El Paso. He asked for $100 in travelers checks. Then he shot a pistol into the ceiling. On assassination day he was safely in federal custody. After he was out of prison he went back to work for the CIA.

William R. Martin was the man who interviewed Nagel for Garrison. After Nagel recognized Martin as a fellow CIA operative, he refused to cooperate further with Garrison's investigation. In a 1967 letter to Martin, Nagel wrote:

"...while you people may have set sail in the right direction you are now (from what I hear) about 180 degrees off course... but then, that is how it was meant to be."

Earl Warren was writing his memoirs when he died. An anonymous editor finished them for us. The last chapter is about the Warren Commission report. I conclude with a quote from this anonymous final chapter:

"To question the conclusion of the Warren commission is to question the integrity of the US government." (CL)

72. 1979

You already know the official versions. Jonestown a mass-suicide cult, followed by the freaky activities of poor Dan White, a good cop turned psycho. If you take a good look at Mr. Jones and his clique, you might reach a different conclusion, and that goes double for Danny.

Let's go: Jones, born in Indiana-father was in the KKK. Boyhood friend for life was Dan Mitrone. Mitrone was a cop who later protected Jones fake revival healer circus act from being run out of Richmond, Indiana in the '50s. Mitrone went on to work with the CIA, training South American dictators to torture and interrogate captured opponents until he was caught and executed in Uruguay in the '60s. Costa-Gavras did the movie "State of Siege" on this story. Jones hung out with Mitrone in Brazil in the early '60s and was visited and paid by the U.S.

embassy staff (CIA). Jones and his flock gained lots of mysterious money and set up shop in Mendocino county, California.

By 1967, we have a mini-Jonestown in Ukiah, CA, the "Happy Havens Rest Home" surrounded by electric fences, guard towers, etc, and nobody called him on it. Jones' skill in worming his way into power circles was key to his success, if you want to call it that. He was tight with John Birch Society guys, a member of the Grand Jury and his wife, Marceline on the state board of nursing home inspectors. Neat, huh? They got people sent there by court orders, psychiatric inmates, prisoners, foster children, elderly, and kept their money. Jones organized a voter drive for Nixon in '68. A few years later Jones was organizing voters for S.F. mayor George Moscone, calling his outfit "People's Temple". It sounded perfect. Nobody bothered to check into Jones's background. In San Francisco, members couldn't leave because they had signed away all their property willingly or unwillingly to the Temple. The ruling clique of the People's Temple had lawyers who drew up crooked contracts for members to sign. Also people like George Philip Blakey, with the CIA, put up the down payment for Jonestown in Guyana. He was later busted for hiring Mercenaries for the CIA-backed UNITA guerrillas in Angola. Pseudo-progressive Mark Lane latched onto Jim Jones and became his personal attorney, along with Charles Garry, attorney for the Black Panthers. They went around the media selling Jonestown as paradise. Lane is said, "fed Jones's paranoia" and may have been part of a program to tip the ol'boy to Guyana.

The trouble with Jonestown is: what the hell was it? The soil was no good for farming. It was rich in minerals, though. The members actually were inmates of a concentration camp fed the barest minimum to keep from starving to death while at the same time, received medical attention every day, shots, checkups, etc. (hospital bracelets on wrists in news photos) inmates were kept in wretched cramped conditions, but the organization was well-funded. Drugs found on the site were reminiscent of MK ULTRA mind control experiments terminated by the CIA. They had tranquilizers and mood altering drugs far in excess of the population of Jonestown. There was a group of guards, mostly white, known as the "basketball team" that was not among the dead.

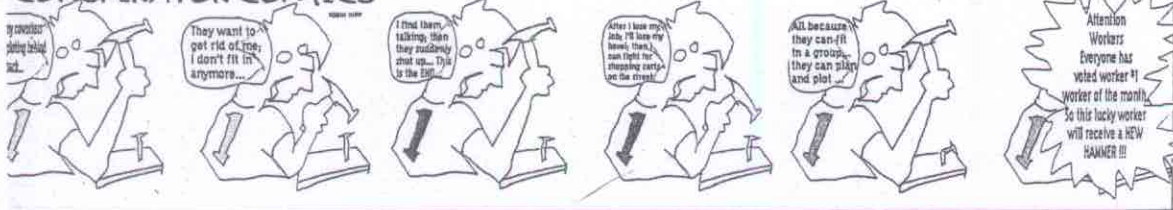

After Representative Leo Ryan visited Jonestown the mass-killing began. The co-author of the Hughes-Ryan Amendment forcing the CIA to give prior notice to Congress before any covert actions was now history. Mark Lane and Charles Garry survived the massacre untouched. First on the scene of the mass-deaths at Jonestown was Guyanese Army. They counted 408 dead. They said 700 fled into the jungle. US army arrived and took 3 days to arrive at a final count. They gave out several conflicting stories. The Guyanese couldn't count. Bodies were on top of bodies. 500 bodies were hidden by a building the size of a 2 car garage. (look at the photos) Could it be that it took 3 days to count the victims because they were still being killed?

Another problem: Guyanese pathologist dr. Mootoo was on the scene before the U.S. army. He detected NO CYANIDE in bodies. Cyanide causes contortions and spasms, and a "death grin". None were present. Nearly all dead had needle marks on the back or shoulder blades, needles in back of neck, strangulation, gunshot. They are relaxed, lying in neat rows-not suicide: murder.

9 days later, San Francisco Supervisor Dan White methodically shoots down Mayor Moscone and Supervisor Harvey Milk, two members of Jim Jones assassination list. Dan White's disgusting sobbing performance in front of the media contrasted sharply with the observances of his jailer. The jailer noted White as cold, calculating, knowing "exactly what he was doing". of course the jailer was not called to testify. White's laughable sentence was a strong warning to liberals as to how expendable they are. It was like a military coup in San Francisco. The politics of the city took on a pro-corporate stench for years. On the plus side, the Gay rights movement expanded it's base across San Francisco and elsewhere. It became far less a marginalized movement after the White Night Riots. And the Jonestown suicide cult story, although false, served to inoculate many people against cults. (FR)

Larry Flint, LAPD, and KAL-007-1978; Attempted assassination of Hustler publisher Larry Flint in Lawrenceville, Georgia after Flint announced a $1 million dollar reward for new evidence in the JFK assassination and released the so-called The Gemstone files, which reportedly implicates Government officials in the murder; Flint attacker escapes unidentified and is still at large (from the book Illuminoids, by Neal Wilgus).

Flint points the finger at the Birchers; Lawrenceville also being the congressional district for Birchet/right winger Congressman Larry McDonald, who was also the head of the right wing organization called the Western Goals, later involved in a scandal involving them possessing the entire computer log of the LAPD, then headed by Daryl Gates who years later resigned right before the Rodney King riots.

Congressman Larry McDonald would then die in a flambe' burst of glory, being one of the passengers on the shot down Kal-007.

In an interview, Larry Flint makes light of it, claiming responsibility for shooting down Kal-007.

74. MAN MADE AIDS

Theories have abounded for years that the Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) was developed as a government plot to destroy the gay, minority and drug using populations. Evidence has emerged to indicate that at the very least, AIDS is the result of a biological warfare experiment gone awry.

Comparisons of the HIV with other viruses found that it shares a remarkable similarity with the Visna ("tiredness" in Icelandic) virus, a disease found exclusively in sheep... the symptoms of Visna-organ system disorders, most severely in the brain, resulting in motoric disorders, severe dementia and ultimately death- are shared with those in advanced stages of AIDS. The Visna, however, is not pathogenic to humans.

The first known case of AIDS occurred in New York in 1979. One year later, Dr. Robert Gallo of the Bethesda Cancer Research Center published his discovery of HIV. Shortly thereafter, Gallo stated to newspapers that HIV had developed as a natural process from the Human Adult Leukemia virus, HTLV-1, which he had discovered in 1975. This claim was not published in professional publications and later research by others indicated that HIV and HTLV-1 had basically different structures and that there was no natural process by which one of these two forms could evolve into the other.

The above mentioned comparisons of HIV and the Visna virus also found that HIV has a section of 300 nucleotides that do not exist in the Visna. This area, the envelope of the HIV genome (the area that allows the virus to attach itself to the T-cell receptors of the human body), is particularly unstable and does not biochemically match the rest of the system.

It is believed that this section of nucleotides originates in an HTLV-1 genome and its instability indicates that it appears in HIV through artificial means. Thus HIV is essentially the Visna with HTLV-1 grafted on in order to make it receptive to the human immune system.

Gallo's involvement with HIV and HTLV-1 extends well beyond their discovery. In the early 1970's, he headed a Pentagon biological warfare research group charged with finding a way to cause animal pathogens to adapt themselves to life in human beings. Gallo's team succeeded in 1975. That same year, in compliance with an international accord banning biological warfare research, the Pentagon demilitarized the "virus" section of its laboratories and put them under the direction of the Bethesda Cancer Research Institute. Coincidentally enough, Gallo, in addition to his Pentagon research, was director of this facility.

It is believed that in keeping with similar practices with nuclear radiation experiments, the HIV was tested primarily on prison populations. As the early symptoms of HIV are mild and the patient generally appears healthy, the researchers, assuming the experiments to be a failure, released the prisoners, as promised in exchange for their participation.

As many prisoners have histories of drug use and homosexual encounters, it is not surprising that those areas of the general population were affected first and most severely by AIDS.

Was AIDS developed intentionally to wipe out the "undesirable" elements of our society or was its release on an unsuspecting public an accident caused by ineptitude in its final stages of testing? In either case it is perhaps

76. JIMI/COINTELPRO

Who killed Jimi? Well frankly Jimi killed Jimi, with too many sleeping pills. But there is more than meets the eye in Jimi's short life and untimely death. We all know enough about Hendrix the musician, but what else, what other influences were affecting Jimi before he died? Let's go back in time.

Since the 1930's the forerunner of today's DEA, the FBN (Federal Bureau of Narcotics) and it's head Harry Anslinger along with J. Edgar Hoover's FBI, had been keeping surveillance on many of the days most popular jazz musicians including Duke Ellington, Dizzy Gillespie, Louis Armstrong, Cab Calloway, Count Basie, Jimmy Dorsey and others. It is astounding to think that the music our grandparents fell in love to was considered threatening by the heads of these government agencies. With this as perspective it is not so surprising to find that when the mental and physical revolutions of the 1960's occurred, that the music and its creators that were catalysing, and chronicling them, would be targets of the powers the were (be).

Jimi Hendrix was just one among many that found himself (willing or not) as a focal point for a extensive movement and that movements enemies. By the end of the 60's he was one of the most highly paid and reknown artists in the world. He was not, unlike many, consumed by the politics of the times that seemed unescapably woven into the cultural transformation but he could not and did not ignore them totally. His song "Machine Gun" was only a small (though not un-earthshaking in itself) part of his personal 'activism'. In January 1970 the Band of Gypsies headlined a Vietnam Moratorium Committee benefit and with his funding Abbie Hoffman and the Yippies mailed a joint to every U.S. congressman and senator so they could smoke what they were passing laws against. Obviously his drug usage and generous references to it in his music made him unpopular with "the Man" and an easy target for their, as we now know, grossly hypocritical drug policies.

Another mark against Jimi was his admitted sympathies for the Black Panther cause. Though he never gave them the official endorsement they may of liked, he was put in an increasingly difficult position after the 1968 assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. There was much pressure on him to make some sort of explicit statement or allegiance on the race issue as he was seen by the Panthers as being the only black man that had such a vast influence over his white audience. Jimi's heart may have laid more with MLK Jr. but he did not forget the Panthers. In fact, he contributed thousands of dollars to them, to the point that some believe that the Panthers were extorting money from him. In cities that the Black Panthers had a strong presense they would simply grab the gate receipts after the show.

These sort of contacts most definitely did not go unnoticed by the intelligence branch of the government agency that dealt with this, namely the FBI's COINTELPRO. Here was a extremely wealthy entertainer donating money to, in the governments eyes, a militant black extremist group, not a good investment Jimi. It is well documented that the Black Panthers disintegrated after being infiltrated by provocateurs and police. The more powerful members were slandered, jailed, or murdered. By doing this, COINTELPRO had attempted to make this unfortunate end the legacy of the Black Panthers, painting over the good with the bad. The same could be said for the legacy of Jimi had he not left behind many recordings that atest to his genius. Above all I am not implying that Jimi Hendrix was killed by anything but his own bad judgement. But in light of his unsavory associations and prominence in the "awakening of a generation" he may have bowed out gracefully and just in time, saving his name from being side by side in eternity with his friend John Lennon. ### 78. DUH....

The conspiracy of Stupidity

It's all too much to deal with...right?? Why bother voting on it, speaking bout it or even thinkin bout it? Don't bother me man- cause I'm just waiting for the Apocalypse.

IT IS OFTEN NOT THEM VERSUS US, BUT US VERSUS US.

Seeping into our consciousness, the dramas and subplots of the world abound—raising our cynicism to an all-time high. Every day the media spews a never-ending stream of happy news camouflaging toxic waste & human cruelty, numbing our hearts & minds. The manifestation of this Apathy can be found lying in the doorways of downtown office buildings, the unemployment lines and in the bathroom mirrors when we face the limitations we place on our own capabilities. Rational human beings are forced into a meltdown of our inner core into black holes of despair. Sensibilities ring with the shutdown of reason and hope. Atrophied capabilities & forgotten dreams rest on the remote control, to tune into the ominous THEY of our nightmares.

WELL BROTHERS AND SISTERS THE APOCALYPSE IS RUNNING LATE.

The conspiracy of stupidity fed to us via the cathode ray nipple needs to cease. Remember that our WILLS & MINDS are FREE. Nihilistic cool is just another front for apathy. The TRUTH is under constant assault...and HOPE? Hope is like a small child waiting for us to protect it and guide it towards the future.

Our strength and intelligence can get us out the power mongers. Examine the Shit THEY try to pass off as truth and call what it is. Remember the anesthetizing years of the Reagan presidency, Contragate & the further destruction of our communities by Crack. THE THINGS WE DONT SEE WILL SUCK US DRY IF WE REST ON COMPLACENCY & UNCONSCIOUS CONTENTMENT.

OUR CAPABILITIES ARE BOUNDLESS IF FED BY THE TRUTH. (M)
