"In sheer story drive, even better than In Cold Blood!"*

"A superb reconstruction of a crime that has become part of American history . . . one of the most remarkable feats of investigative reporting I have yet read . . . Short of reopening Ray's trial, this book seems to me almost like a novel with its dialogue, evocative descriptions, and triple climax of crime hunt and trial . . . By far the best book on the Martin Luther King assassination . . . destined to remain the definitive account."—John Barkham, New York Post

"Frank's picture of Ray is remarkable, far more than a collection of macabre bits . . . Delving into all the details and mysteries that still surround King's murder, Frank presents evidence, conflicting reports, false leads, rumors, opinions, and untruths in more or less the order in which a dispassionate insider—had one existed—might have come upon them himself."—John Skow, Time

"The prodigious manhunt makes fascinating reading . . . Every day of Ray's time from the murder to his arrest is accounted for . . . This is the most persuasive analysis yet presented of one of the bitterest tragedies in American history, one not exceeded since the death of Abraham Lincoln."—Gerald W. Johnson, Washington Post Book World

"Some of the best police work I have ever seen put into a book . . . This is a full-dress investigation, and it makes a good story—a story of crime and its detection, of punishment and its processes."—Hoke Norris, Chicago Sun-Times

"Told with the sweep and excitement of a novel . . . The author of The Boston Strangler reveals a flair for drama, as well as a solidly researched familiarity with local moods and events . . . A fascinatingly written tale."—Fred J. Cook, Saturday Review

*David Appel, Philadelphia Inquirer
