Dear Harold:

Your description of Fred Graham (Post Mortem) was both accurate and prophetic. I presume you're aware of his role as prosecutor's flack in the trial of O.J. Simpson, on Court T.V.

Presently, as the case against Simpson continues to collapse, Graham is earning his pay as never before. Never mind that it is achingly clear that the prosecutor's own witnesses bear reluctant testimony to the truth that a very small shopping bag full of artifacts is tainted evidence supported by perjured testimony. Graham, together with the likes of Ted Koppel, continue to berate their audiences with the view that our perusal of worthless evidence and perjured testimony is somehow misplaced; we should be looking instead at the "mountain of evidence" that the prosecution has amassed. A cumulative total of lies is somehow probative, even though item by item they are shown to be what they are.

History has a way of repeating itself.

Best wishes,

Russell
