Dear Mr. Moss,

I'm sorry that your letter of the 26th of December got buried in a pile of things to which I could not then attend. I have just worked my way down to it.

First of all, there is nothing for you to fear. Not even if you get active in anything. There are countless students who are active, including some in law school who also manage not to be hurt when grades are given out. One first-year law student also had a book published and tangled with both Jaworski and Dean Griswold in an ultra-conservative area and had only one grade as low as a B.

The obvious ways in which you can help are by sending me clippings of what appears out there that may not here (not on a daily basis but when the envelope holds as much as the stamp will carry) and by writing letters to Congress and asking others also to write and ask for a re-investigation. If I get copies I'll give them to a group of students who have initiated this kind of campaign. If you send clippings please be certain to identify them by paper or magazine and date.

You can also help by trying to get others to inform themselves. My books are the only ones available except for the excellent Presumed Guilty by Howard Roffman. Bookstores will probably have to place a special order for it, from Fairleigh Dickinson University Press.

If you survived the first year of law school perhaps you can help Jim Leser, with whom I work closely as you will recall from Whitewash IV. He may have research to be done in law libraries or need copies of what can be xeroxed in the one you have accessible.

If this is possible, please let him know at 1231 Fourth St., SW, Washington, D.C. 20024.

Sorry about the unintended delay. And for any help that may be possible.

Sincerely,

Harold Weisberg
