Key West, Fla. -- Fourth add Invasion XXX Stop VA.?"

The huge Cuban ^{exile} colony in Miami has circulated rumors for months that an invasion of Haiti was in the making.

The details were not a well-kept secret. A CBS camera crew has reportedly been filming the plotting for six months, beginning in a New York basement.

A top CBS News executive came to Miami two months ago to set up a command post to direct coverage of the invasion once it left American shores.

Later in November, there were reports that the invasion had started. But on Nov. 23, Cuban exiles began to talk details, and it turned out that the invasion plans fell apart.

Napoleon Vilaboa, 29, a one-time rebel army captain in Cuba, said he was approached to be chief of military operations. He said he agreed on the understanding he would have support from the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency.

* He said he was also told he would get air cover from a B26, a DC3, and four single-engine planes equipped with machine guns.

Just days before the invasion was to begin, Vilaboa said, he and Masferrer split and he and his military staff quit.

Early in December, the Haitian consul in Miami, Eugene Maximilien, said that Masferrer had offered to call the invasion off for $200,000. Maximilien said he relayed the offer to Duralier, who turned it down.

Masferrer denied the charge. He said he had never met Maximilien.

Among the would-be invaders piled at Key West were Americans Joe Garman, Martin Casey, Paul Theodore and William Hewisler and the lone woman member of the force, Cuban exile Olivia Poggio. Exiles said she was the group's "Quartermaster."

Recognizance bonds of $100 each were set for about 50 of those arrested. Bond was set at $5,000 for Masferrer.

U.S. Attorney William A. Meadows said he is checking to see if Masferrer is in violation of a Federal parole stemming from previous immigration department action against him.

Night lead invasion (350)

By Theodore A. Ediger

Key West, Fla., Jan. 4 (AP) - The only woman in a helter-skelter invasion force aimed at Haiti and Cuba vowed today that the group will try again.

"That was not our first attempt, nor will it be the last. We want to liberate Haiti first, then Cuba," Dr. Aurora Esther Poggio said before she and two dozen men were arraigned on charges of violating neutrality laws.

Dr. Poggio, a 31-year-old brunette who holds a doctorate degree from the University of Hawaii and others were arrested yesterday in a lightning raid by U.S. customs agents moments before they were to leave the Florida Keys.

Plans of the miniature army called for ousting President Francois Duvalier in Haiti, then sneaking across the windward passage to Cuba for an insurrection against Prime Minister Fidel Castro.

Wearing a black oversized man's windbreaker, Dr. Poggio said she joined the army because of her long friendship with its leader, Rolando Masferrer, who called Tiger by his associates.

While the men were lodged in Monroe County Jail, Dr. Poggio was in a clinic for treatment of an injury she said she received when agents arrested the revolutionaries.

"My left kidney was bleeding," Dr. Poggio said. "An officer struck me with a machine gun. It was brutal."
The clinic said her injury was not serious.

appearing in battle dress before U.S. Commissioner William Albright in groups, the commandos were told to show up for arraignment Jan. 25.

They were freed on bonds ranging from $100 to $5,000.

Among them was the Rev. Jean Baptiste Georges, a Canadian-educated Haitian former Catholic priest, designated by the revolutionaries to assume the presidency in Haiti.

"Soldier of Fortune? Bah!" said an American, Gorman (CA) Cavendish, 36 of Miami. "I lost nearly $100 worth of arms and ammunition. I've been in this business for six years. I've got a life time ahead. Many more persons participated in the Haiti deal than are here or in Miami."

The defendants were charged with conspiracy to export arms without a license.

official and taken to Miami.

Enraged that their leader was still in custody, several members of the group hit the side of the car as it bore Masferrer out of town. Several threatened to drive to Miami and free him.

Masferrer was held on a charge he violated Immigration orders that he remain in New York City.

Six of the defendants were arrested in a roundup of 75 exiles and American adventurers Jan. 2 on a secluded island near Marathon in the Keys. Customs agents said they confiscated a small arsenal.

Acting Atty Gen. Ramsey Clark said in Washington that the seven were charged with conspiring to violate a Federal law forbidding preparing or launching from the United States a military expedition against a nation with which the United States is at peace.

Conviction can bring a maximum prison sentence of five years and a fine of $10,000.

Named in the indictment were:

All except Bell were among the 75 arrested Jan. 2 at Marathon, Fla.
The indictment also charges rifles and machine gun parts had been delivered to a house on Southwest 12th St. in Miami.

Another count, which named all except Bell, charged the men with attempting to export arms and other war supplies without a license from the State Department. This carries an additional penalty of two years imprisonment and a $25,000 fine.

The indictment said on Dec. 27, 1966, Francisco Sanchez, named as a co-conspirator, paid about $750 at Marathon, Fla., for the rental of a house at Coco Plum Beach, Fla. The house was to be used to assemble those taking part in the invasion and their arms.

It said also that Bell paid $1,000 to a Richard Harvey at Fort Lauderdale, Fla., to purchase the vessel "Good Richard" last Sept. 12.
