A Singer Who Moves

A Commentary
By Nicholas von Hoffman

Carol Henderson Evans is a confessed "singer who moves." It's a classification in show business. Like singers who dance, and singers that don't move.

"A singer who moves means I can dance some, if it's not too complicated. I played the barn dinner theaters, musical comedies like Highlights of Broadway. I'm also classified as a belter, the perennial second lead who comes out in the second act and does the show stopper."

On Tuesday John Mitchell's agents tried to persuade Carol Henderson Evans to sing for a grand jury investigating the Mayday Conspiracy. If your attention has wandered from the traffic stoppage of Mayday to greater plots and grand murders lately appearing in those American newspapers as yet uncensored you are forgiven.

Mayday happens every autumn when Ohio State plays Michigan. The same kind of stuff — some garbage cans overturned and a few tires slashed — but to the Mitchellisti it takes precedence over everything except gagging newspaper editors.

One of the cardinal tenets of Michellismo is that no songbird is too small and that he, the Michellismo shall say which birds will tweet and which shall not. So the Times was ordered to keep quiet and Carol Henderson Evans ordered to perform.

She wouldn't, so she's in jail on contempt of court. The reason she wouldn't sing for four straight appearances before the grand jury was that she didn't want to rat on her friends in the Mayday Collective: "They ask me questions like what was the People's Coalition for Peace and Justice. What is Mayday? Have I ever participated in press conferences? Do I know Rennie Davis, John Froines or Sid Peck? Had I ever attended any meetings planning Mayday with Rennie Davis and Sid Peck? So if I give them names they know about, I give them evidence; if I give them names they don't know about, I'm giving them leads."

Evans is a belter, but before the Michellisti she is a nervous young woman of 24 who grew up in Tucson, Arizona and attended the University there for two years. She can joke about it ("Don't Pass Go. Don't Collect $200. Go to Jail.") but the other day when she knew it was coming up on her fast, she said, "I'm spaced out since I got into this grand jury business. I keep forgetting things. The grand jury is so very intimidating. You really wouldn't believe it. There are men at these tables and a court reporter with that weird little machine they talk into. And there are some other men sitting down. I don't know what they do."

"There are only six whites and eighteen blacks on the grand jury. Most of the blacks are middle class government workers. The foreman is such an obvious tool of the government. Very nervous and trembling."

"The whole atmosphere—they don't realize they can ask questions; they don't realize how much power they have; they don't realize that grand juries were set up to protect the people. They're people and I suppose it's possible to reach them. I wish I knew enough about the grand jury system and had enough confidence to try. Some of them smile openly, I mean now they do, because they've seen me three times and one juror asked if she could look after my little boy if I went to jail."

Carol Henderson Evans—she prefers her middle name to be used—is divorced with a two-and-a-half-year-old son, Darin Scott-Christian Evans. Darin Scott-Christian
