

Dennis MacDonald
188 Wilford St.,
Manchester, NH 03102

2/25/96

Dear Dennis,

Bill Mills has become ~~and~~ a good and helpful friend. He owns a quality security service in a small California town, so small no home mail delivery, Hughson. After he was here last fall he sent us supplies he thought we could use. Right now he and a former employee who has a duplicating service, are preparing to do some Whitewash for me at less cost than I'd been paying. When he heard of the problems I'm having this year with the student typists he volunteered the services of one or two daughters who have gone to business college. I decided to send him what I did on the ~~MISSK~~ Walt Brown book. I've searched all over for the originals and can't find them. When I thought I remembered that I'd sent that to you. Instead of going over the file in which I may have made no reference to it, I ask if when you have time you let me know if I did.

I did copy for one of the inactive students the epilogus chapters to Waketh. I'll send them instead.

I've still heard nothing from the two local students in two weeks. One I know has little time. The other I'm just forgetting about. As I will about the one from India who phoned me looking for work and in two weeks did not respond when I asked her how much time she has. She did phone after I was asleep Friday night and said she'd phone again next week. She left no message with me.

I've finished reading and correcting about 50,000 words on Groden's The Killing of a President.

The man who would be Hemingway was here yesterday. He has it all retyped but had some questions. Every one was from the mess he made when he decided not to correct typos.

He'll be making diskettes. I think that rather than have him make more corrections I may send an errata slip with the diskettes. I'll know better when I see what I get.

The night cashier at the supermarket <sup>market</sup> where I walk three early mornings a week is studying to become a paralegal at the local community college. I think I'll ask her if she knows any students there interested in doing some typing. If she does that will take care of the Groden ms.

If it works out OK with Mills' daughter and you have the Brown ms. perhaps we can get that done there, too.

Our weather has moderated. Just a few minutes ago it looked like the deer are finding fresh grass to eat.

Thanks and best,

Harold