Dear Bill,

We both appreciate your kind comments of the 17th and we join in telling you that if you are ever near here you'll be welcome.

You conclude saying that if there is anything you can ever do to ask it. I do not ask you to do anything but I do ask if what I will recount has any possible meaning or origin within your experience

About the time several years ago I figured out how I could continue to write and to try to make a record for history, we began getting mildly harassing phone calls. To begin with there were two kinds. One was a series of women asking for a woman for whom they all used the same first name. When I said nobody by that name was on our phone they all hung up. I think some did when they heard a man's voice. I can think of at least one obvious explanation for this.

Coinciding with that we got many calls that were silent, nothing said as soon as one of us answered. And then after a brief delay, the click.

I decided to get a caller ID. On a hunch I did the shopping by phone so that if there were eavesdropping that I was getting one would be known. From the time that was connected until now not another of those woman calls. And for some time none of the silent ones. But they have returned and now are regular.

And all are outside the area and the numbers do not show on the Caller ID.

After the AT & T ads for the new machine that shows names I asked at Radio Shack and on that 800 number. It seems that the same area restrictions apply so there seems to be no special benefit getting the newer ~~device~~ Call Identifier

In all this time I do not recall a single one of those calls within the area that is recorded or a single wrong number, although there may have been some over the years. It does seem strange that all are from where the calling number does not show on the caller ID. And that they are at least daily.

If there is some childish hanky panky, because anyone who knows us or has tried to learn about us knows we <sup>almost</sup> are never away from home for long, it seems most likely to be official. If so it is a waste of time to ask anything of the phone company.

We are not all that troubled by it but sometimes they are a nuisance. As when only one is home and in the bathroom.

But we are both curious about it.

I do not know that anything like this comes up in your security work but I write to ask if it suggests anything to you.

Thanks and best wishes,

Henry
