EDITORIALS "-5-7

Nixon's odd view of the Court and character of Lewis Powell Jr. and William ident was earlier ready and eager to settle for less choice, it is still important to ask why the Pres-Rehnquist. In the relief everybody feels at their t's possible to disagree with the points of view nominees, but harder to question the ability of President Nixon's two Supreme Court it came clear that Nixon's real preferences were tinguished qualifications of both did Nixon switch Herschel Friday, a Little Rock lawyer, and Mrs to his better backup names. bar association committee questioned the undis-Mildred Lillie, a Los Angeles judge. Only after a In all the preceding weeks of leaks and rumors, foreign policy and in economics, he has shown is hard to explain in ways that do him credit. In tice Burger is generally applauded. But he came is on the whole good, and his choice of Chief Jusord of appointments to the lower federal courts reversed by men he appoints to the bench. His rec with the minimum of zeal and hopes to see them cisions of the Supreme Court; he enforces them ident would like to undo some of the landmark dein burrowing down old narrow paths. The Preshe and Attorney General John Mitchell persist policy, but not in that troubled social area where himself capable of imaginative reversals of past to Justice Blackmun only after going through the What the President was really hoping to achieve > sibilities suggested a search for minds so mediin their prejudices. The President seemed to beocre that they could be counted on to remain set feats, and his recent list of Supreme Court posthe Court was to make it less worthy of respect. lieve that one way to diminish the influence of spectacle of the Haynsworth and Carswell dea justice should seek his answers in legislative inimpressive minds as Oliver Wendell Holmes, Louing, instead of trying to legislate the political beconservative. The latter more or less believe that stances an audaciously pious assertion of his deis Brandeis and Felix Frankfurter have all lived enough: men of as diverse political views and as liefs and social changes he may himself favor. Fair votion to judicial excellence. He also got himself choices, Nixon delivered what was in the circumby that creed tent, judicial precedent and constitutional wordlitically conservative and those who are judically into some confusion between jurists who are po-After finally extricating himself from his first ening the peace forces as against the criminal forcsuring rights to those under arrest, thus "weakcial view" on the bench was not all that Preswho would pursue a "personal political and so-Supreme Court has lately "gone too far" in asident Nixon had in mind. He believes that the But preferring such judicial restraint to those > some intellectual distinction on the bench. many police officers, and by the alarming rise in criminal elements." The complexity of this issue or 'social'-does not speak in terms of giving the ophy-if it is truly judicial rather than 'political' es in our society." As Harvard Law School Proviolent crime—is good reason for having men of cerned both by the caliber and temperament of peace forces 'tools' to 'protect the innocent from fessor Alan Dershowitz says, "A judicial philos--at a time when the country is necessarily con-

appears well-grounded. way of surprising themselves and their presidenyoung for the High Court, a Goldwater conserand in both cases the is some sense of a man's character and intellect, the two. But justices on the highest court have a rigidity of his past remarks on crime and civil libquestioning from Democratic senators about the vative and Mitchell assistant with a brilliant legal sible influence. Rehnquist is 47, refreshingly Richmond lawyer, should be a steady and senand-order men. Powell, at 64 a well-respected in the meaningful shorthand of our times, as lawfeel encouraged to aim as high in the future. tial sponsors. All that can be known in advance erties. He seems the more judicially activist of mind; he can be expected to undergo some sharp Both Messrs. Powell and Rehnquist are known, President's confidence The President should