"We have a mechanism but it is not very workable," Kohn said. "It doesn't take into account political alliances or provide for action when others are unwilling to act."

He alleged that the state constitution and the new criminal code specifically provide the attorney general with power to intervene in all suits, civil or criminal, or to institute suits or investigations and give wide supervisory powers over state district attorneys.

"There is nothing specifically in the state constitution or statutes which allows the governor to intervene directly," he said. "But, the governor has the power to demand the attorney general to intervene."
