Yesterday a woman I've known since her student days of two decades ago phoned to tell me that the executive director of the group supervising the disclosure of records under the new law would like to meet me. I have ~~xxx~~ forgotten Roseanna's last name. She was the high-school friend of the man who is now a Hollywood comedy writer, Robert Bruce. Robert has been my friend since his undergraduate days. When he went to Hollywood on graduation she went to Washington. Last I heard from her she was working on the Hill. Yesterday she told me she is working for the ABA, on human rights. Glad to know that has become an ABA interest. I did not ask her this man's name or why he wants to meet me. They are coming up the late morning a week from today. I remember Roseanna as one always interested in social and political problems and as a bright and good person.
