

Nixon Orders Relocating Of Newsmen's Trailer

Post 1/30/74

CAMP DAVID, Md., Jan. 29 (UPI)—The press trailer used by reporters to observe President Nixon's comings and goings at his secluded mountain-top retreat will be relocated on Mr. Nixon's orders.

The trailer, which cost an estimated $30,000 to install and equip, was moved about 300 yards from the helicopter landing pad early last December. A three-sided "Duck blind," which wire service reporters used to telephone their offices after Mr. Nixon's landings and takeoffs, was torn down about the same time.

"There is no question where the orders came from," White House aides said today.

The trailer is still on the grounds at Camp David but the aides indicated that it may be moved down the road to Green Top Camp.

"We're looking for a place to relocate it . . . so that it can serve everybody," deputy presidential press secretary Gerald L. Warren said.

"We thought it could be put in a better place. We're thinking about a lot of things."

The trailer was never a permanent fixture at Camp David. It was put there shortly after Mr. Nixon's re-election in 1972, after he sighted reporters peeking through the small eye slit in the duck blind where they stood awaiting his arrival or departure. He waved and told them, "We're going to improve all that."

A short time later the moss green trailer, complete with carpeting, a television set, hot plate and toilet was installed for reporters. It was immediately dubbed "Poison Ivy."

Reporters have never been permitted free access to the grounds of Camp David and often National Park Police would shoo them off the road when they tried to watch John F. Kennedy or Lyndon B. Johnson arrive and depart.
