

Nixon Estate Is Called Underassessed

San Francisco, Sept. 10 (AP)—The Nixon estate is underassessed, according to a report by the state's top tax official, released today. The report, which was prepared by the state's chief tax assessor, says that the estate's value is significantly lower than what it should be, based on the state's assessment of the Nixon family's assets. The report also notes that the estate's tax liability is therefore lower than it should be, and that the state is losing out on potential revenue. The report was released in the wake of a recent lawsuit filed by the state against the Nixon estate, claiming that the estate had failed to pay its state taxes. The report is a key piece of evidence in the state's case against the estate.

The report, which was prepared by the state's chief tax assessor, says that the estate's value is significantly lower than what it should be, based on the state's assessment of the Nixon family's assets. The report also notes that the estate's tax liability is therefore lower than it should be, and that the state is losing out on potential revenue. The report was released in the wake of a recent lawsuit filed by the state against the Nixon estate, claiming that the estate had failed to pay its state taxes. The report is a key piece of evidence in the state's case against the estate.