

Dear Clay,

6/10/98

I have found seven diskettes of The Louisiest Book, Donahue/Menninger, but before giving them out I have a question about what I have no recollection of yet seems unlikely; there was a time these diskettes were taped together, it seems in pairs, yet I do not recall seeing that earlier and I am certain I did not tear them apart. But every other one seems to have a small piece of tape, as though it had been taped to another diskette.

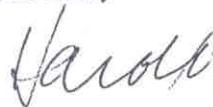

Do you recall whether you sent me extra diskettes of the Hersh manuscript?

I think I recall one and giving that to Dick might but I think now that if I had only one I'd not have given it to anyone. Might have loaned it, though.

If you did send me only one I'll appreciate another six.

I'm at the age where I have a license to be forgetful and not having space and pressing on the writing have added to the resultant problems.

Thanks and best,

While I know nothing about computers and diskettes, it does seem that a manuscript no longer than The Louisiest would not take two diskettes,
