

Army's Stockpile Of Hallucinogen

AUG 4 1975

WASHINGTON (AP)—Large quantities of a powerful hallucinogenic drug were found in 1963 and 1964 and still stockpiled in Army bombs at the Pine Bluff Arsenal, a source familiar with an Army spokesman said.

The source said the drug, known as LSD, was found in bombs that were never used and the Army was not sure how it got there.

The source said the drug was found in bombs that were never used and the Army was not sure how it got there.

The source said the drug was found in bombs that were never used and the Army was not sure how it got there.

The source said the drug was found in bombs that were never used and the Army was not sure how it got there.

The source said the drug was found in bombs that were never used and the Army was not sure how it got there.

The source said the drug was found in bombs that were never used and the Army was not sure how it got there.

The source said the drug was found in bombs that were never used and the Army was not sure how it got there.