The second of these reports attributes to the first what is not there. The first does not say the call was completed. It says merely "an attempt by an unidentified white male to place a long distance telephone call to Indiana". The second one says Rigney "stated the bill failed to indicate any long distance calls had been made..."

The first is not a real report. It fails to give any rudimentary explanation of why this is in the assassination files, or to give and, not matter how inadequate, description of this w/m.

But, it is possible to conjecture, on what has appeared in print and attributed to public authority. A local police official (or sheriff, I do not recall which), in Indiana, reported the finding of a duplicate of the Mannlicher-Carcano left by a toughish man who had stayed in a hotel or motel in his jurisdiction.

It would seem that explaining the reason for the investigation would not have taxed the FBI.
