

Dear Peggy,

3/3/93

I hope you have the article in the Baltimore City Paper the cover of which I used as a cross-reference and now cannot find in any file of any seeming relevance. Harry took that reporter with him and then complained to me about the alleged inaccuracy and unfairness of his article.

Mark Zaid ^{ph}phone to tell me he had spoken to Mary, Buck and you and is representing them. I encourage you to be alert to his using this to advance his assassination-case credentials. He is teaching a course on it and in speaking to me he was soon off on learning what Harry could have learned in his alleged interview of Diane Bowron. I tried to impress on him that it and all like it are irrelevant in his ^{re}presentation of Mary and while he finally agreed, or said he did, his desire to keep talking about that and his lack of questioning of me about what Harry has done and said to me or about what I know is not comforting. I volunteered what I thought could be of help.

Confusing the two, representation and the case, is not uncommon. It may have been the biggest single problem in learning anything at all from James Earl Ray. He believed from the first that Fensterwald was more interested in his CTIA and, alas, he was correct. I had an agreement with Bud that would have prevented that but he did not live up to it. And he had much more experience and knowledge of the law than Zaid has.

^{Zaid}He also did not define his objective to me that I can remember.

He can see in this, his first case, a chance to make a name for himself, and that is fine if he does it the right way. That requires having a defined and understood objective and not complicating that with anything at all related to ^{fact}fact about the assassination.

I do not know what opportunity ^{you}he will have or that you can keep him restricted to only what is necessary to represent Mary's interest but I hope you will be alert to any indication of any deviation and can bring him back to what should be his only objective, representing ^{her}Mary and her interest.

I also wrote her to encourage her and to tell her that when I get ^{HL'D}the letter to her from you I have already written Rookstool telling him that he has involved himself and the FBI in what Harry has done and is doing, unless Harry ^Tlies in saying that he is getting help and information from Rookstool.

Best wishes,
