Dear Mr. English,

Your 12/15 does add a little more that completes a record in missing detail and may have future values.

I hope you can find the Thermofax because it is my recollection the official story that there is no Mothers Day in it. I could be wrong after all these years.

The man with the mike and tape recorder is more likely radio that print press, if that can direct your thinking. He'd have kept such a tape. The chief value to me now is archival. My new book, of which you hear, more than tkakes care of that. But if you find the guy, the main doctor here is Malcolm Perry. I regard him as an honest, decent man who was put under enormous pressures early in his career.

Your story on the casket is correct. There was a final settlement. A handle broke off. But your high-school mate filed fantastic charges.

What also would have historical value, if they exist, is the carbons of the stories filed that day in particular.

Thanks for the time and trouble. If you think of naything else, I'd like to know. Not for writing but just to make a more complete record.

Sincerely,

Harold Weisberg
