Gordon Novel, "missing" witness in the New Orleans assassination probe, turned up in Washington over the week-end and took a lie detector test from a private detective in McLean. Lloyd Furr, the detective, said Mr. Novel "passed" the test, which was related to Mr. Novel's charge that the Jim Garrison probe of the Kennedy assassination is a fraud.

Press Freedom Called 'Not Absolute'

Guidelines for Clay Shaw's

NEW ORLEANS, March 27 (UPI) — Judge Edward Haggerty Jr. was expected to announce press guidelines and security measures today for the conspiracy trial of Clay L. Shaw, the man indicted in Dist. Atty. Jim Garrison's investigation of President Kennedy's assassination.

Judge Haggerty said Saturday the public was entitled to know what was going on, but the defendant is entitled to a fair trial. "As you know, this is a very serious problem. The freedom of the press is not absolute," he said.

SKETCHES

Judge Haggerty, who was selected to preside at the trial last week by drawing, said he definitely would allow artists to draw sketches during the hearing. This was not allowed during Mr. Shaw's preliminary hearing presided over by Judge Bernard Bagert.

As to credentials, Judge Haggerty said, "I can say that the individual passes for spectators for the hearing won't go. The press may not have to go thru the same process."

The Orleans Parish grand jury indicted Mr. Shaw for conspiracy last week after hearing the state's star witness, Perry R. Russo testified he heard Mr. Shaw, the late David W. Ferrie and Lee Harvey Oswald plot the assassination.

Trial Are Set

Mr. Russo told a three-judge panel at Mr. Shaw's preliminary hearing that he heard the three men discuss the plot after a party at Ferrie's apartment here in September, 1963.

PARTY

Mr. Russo testified he attended the party with a girl he identified as Sandra Moffit.

His testimony has been challenged by Mrs. Harold McMains, who says she was known in New Orleans as "Sandy" Moffit and was the woman in question. His testimony has also been challenged by Layton Martens, former roommate of Ferrie's.
