

- (e) At all times the movement of the entire motorcade must be conditioned to correspond with protective requirements.
- (13) The President's car and the protective escort cars should be carefully inspected prior to each trip for mechanical condition, tampering or attachment of lethal devices, and the vehicles should be kept under observation at all times until completion of a movement.
- (14) Escorts of horse cavalry should generally be kept away from the President's car.
  - (a) They are of little or no protective value.
  - (b) They may actually interfere with the movements of the protective detail.
  - (c) High-strung horses may become so excited or uncontrollable that they may rear up over the car and injure the President or others.
- (15) During parades or processions where large crowds are present, efforts should be made to have rope barricades placed along the curbs and uniformed police officers or soldiers should be stationed in the street facing the crowd.
- (16) Soldiers lining a parade route and facing away from the crowd are of little protective value, except in cases where the crowd is out of control.
- (17) Sewers and other passages under streets should be inspected and sealed prior to a publicized parade.
- (18) If great danger is suspected, the occupants of buildings facing parade routes should be checked and a person of known reliability should be given the responsibility in each location of assuring that no suspicious persons are allowed
