NEW ORLEANS, March 9 A moon-faced lawyer who first told the Warren Commission about "Clay Bertrand" was called before the Orleans Parish grand jury today, claiming as he went that he had lost all interest in tracking down the mystery men.

Rotund Dean Adams Andrews Jr. found himself subpoenaed by the grand jurors after an apparently unproductive session last week before District Attorney Jim Garrison's men in their investigation of President Kennedy's assassination.

Garrison has accused New Orleans businessman Clay Shaw of being "Bertrand," a shadow figure that the Warren Commission never located—if, indeed, he exists at all.

Andrews had toldthe Warren Commission that "Clay Bertrand" was "mostly a voice on a phone" who sent Andrws "gay kids" and presumably Oswald as clients. After the assassination, Andrews testified that he was determined to find Bertrand, but he has shown less entthusiasm for the chase in the past week.

Garrison had Shaw booked last week on a charge of plotting with Lee Harvey Oswald, pilot David W. Ferrie and othersto kill President Kennedy.

Brushes Off Reporters

Turning up with his attorney-sidekick Sam Monk Zelden, Andrews jovially brushed off reporters asking whether he could identify Shaw as Bertrand.

"I should care less," Andrews replied. Oswald, he also claimed, is now just "a vague memory."

Pressed several times by newsmen, Andrews—who said hemet Bertrand only twice—was given his advice for the day. "Refuse to answer that on the grounds of no comment," Zelden waggishly suggested.

There was no explanation why the investigation had shifted suddenly, if only temporarily, to the grand jury.

Also subpoenaed was Josephine Hug, a black-haired woman in tangerine tweed who once worked for Clay Shaw at the International Trade Mart here.

Says He 'Cooperated'

Zelden later said Andrews "cooperated" with the jurors at least and had "positively not" taken the Fifth Amendment.

Shaw will come up for a preliminary hearing on his arrest Tuesday with stringent guidelines laid down for the press.

It will be conducted by a three-judge panel named today and including Criminal Court Judge Malcolm V. O'Hara, who ran against Garrison in the District Attorney's race in 1965, charging that the DA had "a Napoleonic complex."

O'Hara lost anyway. He made the charge in what was planned as a key television speech — delivered the day Hurricane Betsy hit town.

JFK Assassination 'Kits' Will Be Sold in Britain

LONDON, March 9 (UPI) A "do-it-yourself" kit enabling the buyer to reconstruct the assassination of President Kennedy goes on sale in Britain March 23, it was announced today.

The kit contains scale models of the Dallas assassination site and full background information for the home sleuth.

The kit is manufactured by Jonathan Cape Ltd. and will sell for $1.90.

There also is a full-scale drawing of the rifle used by Lee Harvey Oswald to kill the President.

The kit's three "authors" are Michael Rand and Howard Loxton of the publishing firm, and Len Deighton, author of the best-selling spy novels, "Funeral in Berlin" and "The Ipcress File."

At a news conference Deighton said he did not feel that the kit, despite its macabre nature, constitued any violation of good taste.

"Anything which helps readers to solve the assassination for themselves is in the spirit of public inquiry," he said.

Other items in the kit include a photograph of the assassination, a photocopy of the official autopsy report and blowup photos of the President's bloodstained shirt and jacket.
