

George,

One of the most ludicrous and self-serving lies in On the Trail is Garrison's claim that his files were stolen. While I have no way of knowing what if anything happened to them, I suspect that he deep-sixed them because they indict him for his stupidities, incompetence and their utter worthlessness.

I have one source who does not want to have any involvement on what I believe is the truth, that Garrison explained their alleged disappearance by saying that he had gotten one of the detectives assigned to him as an investigator, Steve Bordelon, to move them and that instead Steve stole them. I am not certain but I believe Garrison also said that Steve sold them to the CIA.

I was told that Steve not only denies it but refuses to have anything at all to do with or to speak to Garrison. From what I know of Steve, he was intensely loyal to Garrison and would not have done any such thing.

I tried to get his phone and address from New Orleans information. There are six Steve Bordelon's listed. I don't now want to ask who for his address. If you have any way of learning it I'll ~~check~~ see if I can get Steve to respond.

I also do not want to ask Ivon, who agreed for his name to be used in the movie.
