Cheers at Premiere Of 'JFK'

HOLLYWOOD FREEWAY Frank Swertlow

Director Oliver Stone was in a good mood Monday night. He was smiling and receiving hugs and kisses from well-wishers in the rear of the Samuel Goldwyn Theater in Beverly Hills just before a screening of his newest film, "JFK."

After three incendiary hours, there were cheers and applause from normally jaded industry types at the film's conclusion.

What they had seen had practically sucked the air right out of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences theater. There was a gasp — both from the courtroom audience shown on the screen and the one in the theater watching "JFK" — during the segment of the famed Zapruder film showing the right side of President Kennedy's head explode.

Parents who want to take their older children to this R-rated film should know that it contains some extremely graphic footage, including some JFK autopsy scenes that might also trouble adults.

"They incorporated real photographs with re-created scenes," Warner Bros. spokeswoman Vivian Boyers said of the autopsy segment.

The actual photographs of the slain president's head had been released by the government years ago and published at the time, said Stone's spokeswoman, Andrea Jaffe. But this is the first time photos have appeared on the big screen, Boyer said.

This adds a powerful element to an already powerful drama.
