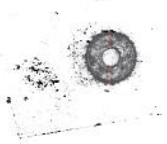
Intrusions here? 5/12/74

In writing Barry Sussman I was reminded of this subject. That reminded me of several coinciding observations of which I had made no note.

There is a special manner in which I arrange the assorted wires at my office phone. The positions and relationships of all were changed.

For the second time I found a very small metallic washer on the living-room rug, a worn out shag which could hide one indefinitely.

In this case it was accidental. For the first time in more than a year we have opened the sofa into a bed. Oliver Gillie of the London Sunday Times was here night before last. Thus also I had to move the cocktail table we keep infront of it. It was on returning this table to its usual place that I saw reflection from what turned out to be this washer.

I can't conceive of any use for this washer. I do know I have none like it and have had no use for any washers in the living room.


It is quite small and thin.
