Dear Jim: There comes a point at which those of compassion must consider that there is another point at which the bravest of souls (and are we blessed by association with those of any other heart?) have sustained all that mortal can bear. So, when you did not answer your phone when I called you after received a detailed account of surveillance upon me while we were in Memphis on discovery, I wrote the friend who informed me without benefit of consultation with you alone. Lest the most stalwart of the heeric be texed past human endurance I send you alone a caren of my response, which is, I think, detailed enough. Now I am less than the staunchest of spirit and the steutest of heart, so all I want to do is seek relief from the courts. I had a strange dream that this was to have been done last month, but that is what happens to those of us prone to dreams. I have a simple question, seeking advaice. What I may be able to do is limited. So, given this new proof of surveillance on me, would I in your opinion do better to seek out one whose specialty is civil or criminal? I'm late getting to this because I've been answering my mail as I open it. The very helpful friend who was also the subject of this surveillance, has been retaliated against. MW 11/16/74
