JL, Bank Surveillance? HW 1/27/75

Several days ago we received a notice from the bank that we had taken credit for a single check twice, a foreign check in the WW IV account.

This made no sense to us so Lil checked it today.

This is the story: we originally deposited the check in May, and received credit for it and, supposedly, we did the same thing again [redacted]

Obviously, we could not have done this. Assuming it was done only the bank could have done it.

Lil's first question was how could all of this have happened in an account that did not yet exist?

Oh? Sorry, their mistake. Our other account.

Well, how come the same check (different sums on their notice) was [redacted] credited twice?

Somehow, their mistake.

When did they discover it? In September.

Deposited in May, error not discovered until September?

I do not think this is normal, nor can I think of any good reason why anyone should have been pawing through my account in September. What you and I were then doing provides reasons, but not "good" ones.

What we were doing is the Ray case and WW IV.

Ineffecient as everyone is today there may be more innocent explanations, but that we did not get any that makes sense does not encourage me to assume innocence is the only possible explanation.
