(By an odd irony, during the energy crisis for which Nixon, his policies and his do-nothing lack or planning and programming were responsible, his own personal physician made unintendedly wry comment on the wiping out of this FDR sentimental remnant. Dr. Walter Trank Trach told the Associated Press in early "ecember, 1973 (WxPost 12/6) that Nixon doesngt get enough exercise, like swimming and walking, because he didn't get to San Clemente and Key Biscayne as often. To this he added a psychological footnote when he was asked why Nixon didn't walk on the spacious and beautiful White House grounds. It was preferable, Tracj said, for Nixon to walk "hwere no one's going to be watching him." Harry "ruman walked the streets of Washington and whatever other city he was in each morning. FDR swam in public after he was President. Eisenhower golfed on public links and practised on the White House grounds. Lyndon Johnson drove his own car and walked the White House grounds with the press. John Kennedy met with the press regularly. But Richard Nixon hid himself. And his own doctor says he has to do even his walking in secret.)
