WHO HAS THE POWER?

(18 June 75)

SOME ANARCHIST INSIGHTS

"The worker in England, France, Holland, and so on participates to some extent in the profits which, without effort on their part, fall into the laps of the bourgeoisie of his country from the unrestrained exploitation of colonial peoples; but sooner or later there comes a time when those people, too, wake up, and he has to pay all the more dearly for the small advantages he has enjoyed. Events in Asia will show this still more clearly in the near future."

-- Rudolph Rocker in Anarcho-Syndicalism, 1938

"My conception of the strike of the future is not to strike and go out and starve, but to strike and remain in and take possession of the necessary property of production. If anyone is to starve ... let it be the capitalist class."

-- Lucy Parsons at first I.W.W. convention, 1905

"Grasp this part, my friend. The expropriation of the capitalist class during the social revolution -- the taking over of the industries -- requires tactics directly the reverse of those you now use in a strike. In the latter you quit work and leave the boss in full possession of the mill, factory, or mine. It is an idiotic proceeding, of course, for you give the master the entire advantage: he can put scabs in your place, and you remain out in the cold.

"In expropriating, on the contrary, you stay on the job and put the boss out. He may remain only on equal terms with the rest: a worker among workers."

-- Alexander Berkman in What Is Communist Anarchism?, 1928

"The strength of labor is not on the field of battle. It is in the shop, in the mine and factory. There lies its power, that no army in the world can defeat, no human agency conquer.

"In other words, the social revolution can take place only by means of the General Strike. The General Strike, rightly understood and thoroughly carried out, is the social revolution....

You can shoot people to death, but you can't shoot them to work."

-- Alexander Berkman in What Is Communist Anarchism?, 1928

THE PRINCIPLES OF LIBERATED YOGA

- 1) Respect for traditional yoga philosophy, except insofar as it tends to be racist, authoritarian, experimentally invalid or otherwise incompatible with a revolutionary pacifist counter-culture.
- 2) Advocacy of sexual freedom; condemnation of sexism; support for erotic mysticism.
- 3) Recognition of the spiritual uses of marijuana; appreciation of research on traditional yogic uses of psychedelic plants; opposition to the use of hard drugs and to the immoderate use of any drug.
- 4) Practice of noninjury toward people and animals; active compassion for the oppressed; energetic involvement in peaceful revolutionary work.
- 5) Freedom from the addictions created by capitalist consumerism; nonattachment to material possessions; development of alternate ways of living.
- 6) Acknowledgement of the need for informed instruction and effective leadership coupled with a commitment to noncoercive democracy; vigorous resistance to all spiritual teachers who demand unquestioning obedience, who charge vast sums of money and/or live in material luxury, who construct around themselves personality cults.

Ford Stumbles On Wheelchair

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — President Ford tripped over a woman in a wheelchair Friday while greeting members of a crowd at nearby Westover Air Force Base.

At first it was reported that Ford had been struck by a flag carried by a small boy, but the President later denied that anything had struck him.

The President was heard to groan and bent his head forward at the time the lad pushed the flag out.

Secret Service agents explained the sudden lurch took place when Ford brushed against the outstretched leg of a woman in wheelchair.

One agent, however, grabbed the boy's flag and threw it down, saying "Get that thing out of here."
