

Dear Mark,

5/29/85

For once the mail was prompt. Your Opposition was in today's mail. It is fine, a first-rate job, for which many thanks.

I like particularly your solution, which we did not discuss, to the problem presented to me by the division of responsibility part of the remand.

It was best and I think wisest to ignore that for now.

I presume that this means you are satisfied with what Hitchcock filed, including the revised affidavit. Maybe satisfied isn't the right word, maybe adequate under the circumstances.

Earlier today I was a bit troubled by something that did not occur to me when we spoke and I said I didn't want Jim to read his revision to me by phone. I then did not think that perhaps I was placing an unfair burden on you. That was not my intention. I hope I didn't.

Your judgement would have been more impartial than mine and the other considerations for me are not for you.

I do, of course, look forward to reading what Hitchcock filed.

Just before driving into town last evening to mail the new evidence material to you a couple of additional ideas suggested themselves. If I do not include that with this I'll do it soon.

Again, thanks,
