Dear Gary,

Along with the recent Crazy Harry diatribe here is the FBI tickler I refer to as a damage -control tickler. It was ^{from} for an FBIHQ file of ticklers only.

The first sheet is copied crookedly. I did that in making the copies of use in a FOIA lawsuit.

I also added the paperclips to mark what ¹ was alling to the judge's attention. Otherwise it is exactly as disclosed.

I remember that Tims story I cite on 118 but have no idea where my copy of it is. In some instances I made and kept copies in the file of rough drafts by chapter but do not have it in that file.

If you can get someone to go to the library for you it can be retriend from the microfiches of the Times most have.

I do not know about the modern retrieval systems enough to say whether it can be gotten that way.

As I now recall, it was not only the Times that carried that story.

There was nothing else with that crazy business from Crazy Harry but I presume he wrote it for publication in one of the newsletters.

Best,
