Dear Stan,

You and Jacqueline both promised me a videocassette (not beta) of your show. (Sorry I've heard nothing about it.) I'd appreciate one even more now because after you were here I had surgery on my better eye and the poorer one, working overtime, is too strained for much reading and makes reading very slow.

If I didn't tell you, all my materials will be a permanent public archive at local Hood College, where a course on The Politics of Assassination is taught. It will go there as soon as I view it so the girls can use it now.

In this regard I'd also appreciate copies of any reviews or stories because I'm compiling a file on the attention to the anniversary (mostly exploitation and misinformation) and of any outtakes you do not need to preserve or keep to yourselves or, in general, any information you can provide.

If you didn't hear of it, there is what, in my reporting days was called "human interest" in the story of a Univ. of Md. graduate student whose thesis in the school of communications was a documentary on the single-bullet theory, "Reasonable Doubt." He and I had to sue the Zapruders, who were stonewalling any response, so he could sell it to A&E. The Zs settled too late for any real promos but that channel got its highest ratings for at least the two previous months with it.

He won the history section "Eagle" or "Golden Eagle" CINE award with it and for the coming year it will be shown in international documentary competitions as representing the U.S. Pretty good for a student, huh? He's 26.

But his remaining debt, not counting to the university, is greater than he got for it.

Best wishes,

Harold Weisberg
