Re: Notes on Cyril Wecht's Opening Remarks
Date: Nov. 15, 1991 JFK Symposium, Dallas Texas

The New York Times didn't write anything on The Men Who Killed Kennedy, but they did have an article on a fictional detective from England. A foreign detective is more important than an A and E program on who killed the President of the United States.

Dr. John Nichols re-enacted 6.5 shootings, and further obliterated the single bullet theory.

The case against Oswald would not have gone to court, and if it did ALL of the evidence would have to be revealed, or Oswald would've been acquitted.

Comparing pertinent things to then and now: the Pentagon Papers and the Archives evidence; Nixon's eighteen minutes of tape and the executive sessions of the Warren Commission; Gary Hart's sex capades and the strange deaths after the assassination; Ronald Reagan's tumor and JFK's tissue slides; Lockerbie explosion investigation.....re-enact CE-399 bullet. "If you don't investigate it, then it didn't happen."

Dr. Wecht didn't just say the above statements, he shouted them with extreme emotion, as only he and Mr. Tatro can do. At one point, he looked to the press people covering the symposium, and pleaded with them to look into this assassination with us if they really care to know the truth.

He reiterated the fact that the HSCA refused to test whether or not they can find one bullet which can duplicate the feat that CE-399 did, or supposedly did on November 22, 1963. He added that the investigating body had two years and six million dollars, but still couldn't find the time or revenue to conduct the test. Dr. Wecht said that he offered to pay for the test himself, if need be. The HSCA refused his generous offer..

At the end of his opening presentation, Dr. Wecht received a long and thunderous standing ovation.
