The nine young men and three women arrested told police they were revolutionaries. Some wore Patriot Party buttons depicting two manacled clenched red fists on a black background.

The man listed in confiscated party literature as the leader of the group is Arthur Turco, 27, a lawyer once associated with William M. Kunstler, chief attorney for the "Chicago Seven."

Police said they were questioning the 12 about the firebombing Saturday of the home of the judge now hearing the case of 13 Black Panthers accused of plotting to bomb subway trains and po-lice stations. Along Broadway today, demonstrators protesting the conspiracy trials of the "Chicago Seven" and the "Panther 21" clashed with police after an orderly march and rally by 5,000.

At least one demonstrator was taken into custody. There were no immediate reports of injuries, but plate glass windows were broken in three banks and several stores.

The clashes occurred after the demonstrators marched 18 blocks from 42nd Street down Fifth Avenue to Madison Square Park. Despite the admonitions of the Chicago defense lawyer, Kunstler, to "cool it," small numbers of dents, including an attempt by one to smash a plate glass window in a nearby bank with an ashcan.
