Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace will undergo two to four hours of daily physical therapy in his Miami Hotel suite during the Democratic National Convention next week, his doctors said Tuesday.

The governor's physician, Dr. Joseph Schanno, said parallel bars and weights will be moved into his hotel, the Sheaton Four Ambassadors, and Wallace will undergo twice-a-day therapy under the direction of a seven-member medical team, which includes four doctors and three nurses.

Schanno said Wallace—who now needs a wheel chair—continued to progress well and is now lifting 50-pound weights as part of his therapy.

Wallace spent more than a hour Sunday on the roof of Holy Cross Hospital in Silver Spring sunning himself. Schanno said Wallace had been getting sun every day since last Thursday.

Schanno at one point said that Wallace really has no reason to remain in the hospital and could leave any time he wanted.

Wednesday, doctors from the Spain Institute, one of the nation's leading spinal cord treatment centers, in Birmingham, Ala., will arrive to take over the governor's therapy.

Schanno said that after the convention, Wallace would be able to return to the governor's mansion in Montgomery, Ala., and he saw no reason for further hospitalization.

On Sunday night, Wallace left Holy Cross Hospital for the first time since he was shot in Laurel, Md., May 15, to have dinner with his wife, Cornelia, at a nearby motel.
