

Ashamed to Be Seen Now

Hamberger Describes Shock Over Bugging

1/27/66
By Jean M. White

Washington Post Staff Writer

LACONIA, N.H., Jan. 26—A former landlord, Clifford C. Eastman, of nearby Gilford, in an invasion-of-privacy suit.

The thought of such undercover spying Hamberger testified today, led to "extreme nervousness" that cost him several jobs and such mental anguish that his wife had to seek psychiatric help.

When he first discovered the speaker, Hamberger said, his wife warned him not to touch it or he might get "a shock."

But the real shock came later when he realized the capabilities of electronic eavesdropping, his testimony indicated.

The father of four children
The Hambergers are seeking $125,000 in damages from their

See BUG, A3, Col. 3

Associated Press

CONFERENCE — Carl Hamberger, left, and his wife, Mae, confer with their attorney, Peter Makris, and electronics expert Richard Shea during a lull in the trial.