Dear Harold,

I cannot imagine what I wrote in my last letter to make you so perturbed at me, but please accept my apologies. As for mention of Posner's book, please understand that I did not do so to rub and in your face and say "See you're wrong and he's right, ha ha ha." I meant absolutely nothing of the sort. At the time I wrote my last letter the only knowledge I had of Posner and his book was from the excerpts in U.S. News And World Report. My reason for requesting your comments on it is that you are familiar with his work, you know more about the assassination than probably anyone in the world, certainly more than I will ever know, and I respect your opinion more than any other critic. I know that to you I am just a bothersome individual who comes to you with all my questions, but what are my alternatives? Shall I write to Livingstone again? Fat chance he'll answer. The minute you so much as question anything he states as fact, he won't talk to you and accuses you of working for the CIA. (In his upcoming book that you wrote me about, I am told he is going to say that Jim Moore's uncle is J. Walton Moore, DeMohrenschildt's friend in the CIA.) Or how about I write to some of the other lunatics who have written books on the assassination that are no more than biased one sided fairy tales (or actually, nowadays a better description would be "Fergie tales") with a complete disregard for the evidence. The fact is that you are one of very few whom I consider knowledgeable and credible. I'm sorry that you have interpreted this as some sort of burden or punishment, but it is the truth.

Thank you for taking the time to reply to all my previous letters. It meant far more to me than you will ever know. I'm sorry that our correspondence has to end with you thinking bad of me, but if it means anything to you, (and I doubt it does), my opinion of you has not diminished at all. It is completely understandable that you are busy and pressed for time. I thank you, however, for actually making time and responding, which is more than can be said for some authors. Best wishes for success on whatever it is that you are working on that seems to be taking up so much of your time. Thanks again.

Sincerely,

Joe Camp

P.S. - Please keep my name and address handy, should you ever find copies of the index to WW 2 and the appendix to O in WO. As for my reason for inquiring about any other books you may have, I seem to have a lot of reading time on my hands and I really don't feel like spending it on books like They've Killed The President or The Oswald File.
