The Massachusetts Democrat told reporters that he had brought the court action "to force the C.I.A. to obey its charter"—that is, the National Security Act of 1947.

Ite added that under his interpretation of the law, the agency had overstepped the rules — by covert operations abroad and by "involvement in the Watergate affair and the activities of the White House been a sharp critic of C.I.A.

Mr. Harrington, who has been a sharp critic of C.I.A. activities over the last year, said "The failure of Congress" to provide adequate legislative oversight was "an incentive" for his suit.

"It's my belief that the C.I.A.
has systematically violated its has systematically violated its charter in the foreign field," he said. His suit lists 65 points of alleged C.I.A. "violations," including its involvement in the abortive 1961 invasion of Cuba, the 1954 overthrow of the Guatemalan Government and support of a rebellion in Indonesia in 1958.
