1/25/72 dear od, excuse typing, must favor thumb while longer, it seems. you will recall that ofter nelaboria's analysis i jokingly valled revisionism you beat a position suff like his, in a way i do not now recall made the cia better guys rather than his good guys. i then argued that the best that coul be said for the claif that it wanted success, had jud more experience in this kind of dirty work and learned more easily what did not work and what failure locked like, and that above all it had learned never to let its our paper got into any other hands so that what it really thought, wanted to do aid planned was largely unknown. I think i also maid they were the ground floor on this. well, I have been mibbling away at the banton pentagon papers, finding it too depressing to read steadily the for times i might. early this a.m. i came to a short passage that illustrates the points i was trying to make, a place where the dia view is remarded, on i wordl, this begins on about p.471. it was in 1966, at the pine by was at his most stupid and most unancessful. in passing, I note that the times analyst has made no ref. to ky's statement that hitler was his idol. and model. everypody them was more possinistic that ever, and had come to the point where it was open, where they let their hair down, said this is the way it is, we carnot win, no matter what, everything we do gets us deeper in, farthur from victory, is ruinous in counterproductivity and costs of all kinds. so, they had a meeting, and the only representative who recommended no charge in unsuccessful course was that of the cia. overybody also was more pessimistic and as i recall at one, agreeing with the cir on course, said it was with pessimism, semething not attributed to the cia. so, accepting this as valid, i argue it as proof of my position with one exception: i exaggerated and use wrong on the perception of the cia, that it was not as swart as i had thought. but if over there was a time for the agency, had it been good guys of any kind, to have asserted itself and its influence to the salandria-attributed end, that was the time, the crucial juncture. here was their real chance to be good guys and they were the baddest. I think that in our own evaluations we should remember there is much we do not and cannot know as fact of them because they are so hidden, iceberg simile, example, was bundy then still their man? od did he not have to be, eid he still
