

BEHIND THE

Martin Luther's Phone Calls

SCENES

Here are some of the facts about the Martin Luther King wiretap, promised in the last issue of The Councilor.

(1) The FBI used as its "reason" for tapping Martin Luther King's phone calls that King was involved with a New York subversive.

(2) Only one newspaper ever dared to print the name of a New York subversive who was funneling money to King: The Councilor.

(3) Name of this subversive is: Corliss Lamont who lived at 450 Riverside Drive in New York City at the time he passed money to King.

(4) Lamont was editor of Soviet Business Today magazine, Chairman of the Congress of American-Soviet Friendship, and was one of the top money contacts of Joe Stalin and Nikita Khrushchev in the United States.

(5) The Councilor learned of Martin Luther King's dependence upon Lamont for funds when it intercepted a briefcase full of papers which had belonged to King. This was about six years ago.

(6) The Councilor learned that Ralph Abernathy, the Martin Luther King lieutenant who "took over" on King's death had visited in Lamont's home and received the money.

(7) The Councilor made this information public. It became obvious to the editor and his associates that the briefcase was a "hot item" and its contents should be displayed publicly as a deterrent against its disappearance or seizure.

(8) Accompanied by armed guards and deputies, the letters and the briefcase were taken across Louisiana and displayed from the stage of a public high school in Natchez, Miss. The Natchez meeting was attended by several hundred persons including one man who publicly identified himself as an FBI agent.

(9) It is not known whether the FBI began its wiretap of Martin Luther King before or after the disclosure of King's connection with communists, but a group in Louisiana decided to launch an all-out effort to inform the nation of King's connections with communism.

(10) The late Judge Leander Perez, working with George Singelmann of New Orleans, had huge billboards printed in New Orleans. These billboards featured a photograph of Martin Luther King lecturing at a communist training school at Monteagle, Tenn.

(11) The Councilor directed a campaign to have hundreds of these billboards erected around the nation and printed untold thousands of postcards with the tattle-tale photograph. By now the pressure was on the FBI to keep clean tabs on King.

(12) Councilor editor Ned Touchstone and his associate, Courtney F. Smith, flew to Montgomery, Ala. for the unveiling of the first billboard. It was erected on U. S. Highway 80--the Selma Road--under direction of a Montgomery civic leader, Mr. Don Hallmark. When new magazines published a photograph of King looking at the billboard during the Selma March, Editor Touchstone state publicly:

"We are in good shape in exposing King if the boys in New York don't decide to kill him. He will be no good to them alive, and they may want to make a martyr out of him. I certainly hope not."

(13) Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy must have been the man who authorized the FBI wiretap of calls involving Martin Luther King. Kennedy had wiretapped Lyndon Johnson and Johnson's business partner, Bobby Baker.

(14) Martin Luther King and FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover exchanged public insults before the Selma March but Bobby Kennedy remained in the background.

(15) The attorney general was meanwhile closely involved with the Southern Conference Educational Fund in New Orleans, an organization labeled as a communist front in sworn testimony. The Councilor received copies of letters from SCEF leaders which were highly derogatory of King's work, labeling him undependable. In the same batch of letters was mail from Kennedy to this alleged communist front asking for advice on political matters.

(16) Once when Attorney General Bobby Kennedy denied that he gave authority for controversial wiretaps, FBI director Hoover produced memos proving that Bobby had given authority.

(17) The FBI in making wiretaps is supposed to be concerned only with matters of national security and not with sexual liaisons. But the white woman involved in the King case is a "Queen Bee" with Red connections.

(18) The FBI played its wiretaps of King to a number of United States congressmen. Information given to an agent of The Councilor indicated that the tapes dealt largely with King's sexual involvement the "Queen Bee." This fact is generally known among congressmen but has never appeared in print, according to our source.

(19) The Councilor did not print the information about the sex wiretaps because The Councilor is concerned with matters of national security and survival of the Reliable informants have told The Councilor that nearly every major negro agitator in America is "controlled" by a female white communist agent. Fantastic? We don't think so. Our own research indicates that the Reds do indeed use white females as agents of provocation and agents of instruction to foment riots, anarchy and arson. It's time that we face the facts.

nation--not with illicit sex relationships. We did not at that time know that the woman was a "Queen Bee."

(20) After Nicholas Katzenbach became Attorney General, one half of the Justice Department was trying to "hang King" and the other half was coddling him. Katzenbach protected King, and even permitted members of King's radical Red organizations to use Justice Department vehicles for personal driving.

(21) The FBI turned up absolute proof that Martin Luther King's organization was stealing cars to supplement its income from communists and do-gooders. Katzenbach protected King and the various King lieutenants who were involved in this MLK Car Theft Ring. To our knowledge, none of the MLK thieves was ever tried.

(22) Federal authorities--including, probably the FBI--have information that a King lieutenant was involved in the Memphis assassination of King.

(23) The communist agent who supplied funds to King was the son of International Banker Thomas William Lamont. Lamont was a Rothschild agent at the 1919 peace Conference in Paris, and a close associate of the Warburg Family who also supplied funds to King in the early 1960s.

(24) The communist agent's brother, Thomas Stillwell Lamont, was a director of the Phelps Dodge Corporation.

(25) Katzenbach's aunt by marriage was the notorious Rose Harriet Pastor Stokes, a Russian woman who was jailed in World War 1 for throwing bombs in the United States to support the Marxist revolution. She married a fellow communist, James G.

Phelps Stokes, president of the Phelps Stokes Corporation, and head of the Russian Information Bureau from 1917-1922 (during the Russian Revolution). Corliss Lamont was a protege of Phelps Stokes and his Russian wife.

(26) Father of the communist agent James G. Phelps Stokes was Anson Phelps Stokes (1838-1912), a partner in Phelps, Dodge & Co., and an early-day radical and a probable Rothschild agent.

(27) Parents of Katzenbach's aunt, Rose Pastor Stokes, were Jacob Weislander and Anna Lewin of Augustava, Russia. They sent her to the Jewish Free School in London at age eight. By her account she came assistant editor of the Jewish Daily News in New York City at age 24, and a bomb throwing Marxist at age 38. In the meanwhile, at age 27 she had married the multi-millionaire communist.
